WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Landlords Rebel Over Rent Curbs; Russians Set up Anti-ERP Program; Israel, Egypt Sign End to Fighting

REBELLION:
Among Landlords

Chest out, muscles flexed, truculent of attitude, members of the American Property Owners association in 20 cities threatened wholesale eviction of tenants in protest against rental control bills now in congress.

AN OFFICIAL of the organization, composed chiefly of owners of small propertly, said in Tulsa, Okla., 600 to 1,000 eviction notices would be mailed to Tulsa tenants advising them to vacate within 60 days. Similar action, he said, was expected in Chicago, Houston, Kansas City, Detroit, St. Louis, Fort Wayne, Grand Rapids, Danville, Ill., and other cities.

The eviction notices affected rent-controled housing and included houses and apartments. Business units are not under rent control.

SPEAR-HEADING the Tulsa movement was a retired Baptist minister, the Rev. Wallace J. Murphy, executive-secretary of the 200-member Tulsa property owners organization, and an honorary president of the national association.

The Rev. Murphy termed two rent control bills now before congress "intolerable," and said, "we refuse to operate so long as rental controls are on." Owner of considerable property in Tulsa, the retired clergyman asserted, "we don't intend to serve under slavery which would take away the right to control our property. It is not enough that we must rent our property at a loss—now they want to fine us and put us in jail."

Landlords appeared mainly incensed because pending rent curb measures would be giving the federal housing expediter right to control evictions, extend rent control periods, provide triple damages for overcharges on rent, and permit fines up to $5,000 and a year in jail for convicted violators.

OBSERVERS WONDERED IF landlords weren't letting their wrath becloud their judgment. For, under existing law, which doesn't expire until late March, landlords are prohibited from doing exactly what the Rev. Murphy and his associates plan to do.

The Tulsa incident was merely fuel to the flame of belief that if rent curbs are not maintained, the question of housing for those who cannot afford to buy homes would become even more difficult than it is at present.

RUSSIANS:
Coming to Tow?

Messers Joe Stalin and the politburo, so long and so vocally derisive of everything the western world has or offers, were subconsciously paying that world the sincerest form of flattery—imitation.

The Russians had come forth with their own version of ERP, alphabetical symbol of the Marshall plan for aid to Europe.

AS THE EAST'S answer to the European recovery plan, Russia had organized the economic council of mutual assistance for cooperation with five of her neighbors, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Romania.

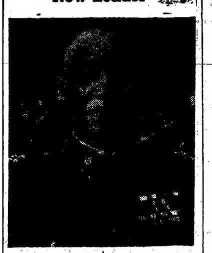
The purpose, as outlined from Moscow, was "the exchange of experience in the economic field, the rendering of technical assistance to each other, and the rendering of mutual assistance in regard to raw materials, foodstuffs, equipment, etc." Russia, with her vast resources, obviously was to be the key nation in the council.

The Kremlin held the door open to other nations. The announcement said, "other countries of Europe that share the priciples of the council and wish to participate in broad economic cooperation with the aforementioned countries," may join.

THAT MOSCOW was considering the Marshall plan when its six-nation council was formed was evident in a Russian charge that the ERP interfered with the sovereignty of nations, and that the U. S., Britain, and "certain other countries of western Europe" were boycotting the six nations in trade.

The Russian action may prove to be the vital error in the Soviets' program of expansion. If the system fails to function, it will serve only to spotlight the efficacy of the Marshall plan and the superiority of the western nations in equipment and ability to keep European commitments.

New Leader



Li Tsing-Jen, China's nationalist vice-president was holding the reins of organized government following Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's departure from Nanking to clear the way for a Communist-directed peace.

PEACE DOVE:
Hovers in East

Hovering wings of the dove of peace were becoming faintly audible in the Holy Land dispute.

Israel and Egypt signed a permanent cease-fire order and armistice talks were still going on after recent difficulties.

THERE WERE even more significant developments looking toward final peace in the long controversy stemming from the partition of the Holy Land to make the area available as a place of settlement and nationalization of Jews.

Great Britain had capitulated, and with the British lion on its side, the new nation of Israel had the two most powerful nations in the world committed to its support.

Other nations were falling in line to recognize the Jewish state. Indications were that with the trend apparently fully in motion, Arab opponents to the Israeli state would soon be standing completely alone in their opposition.

SHOULD THAT condition eventuate, Israeli seemingly would have nothing to fear, inasmuch as its armies already have proven a match for Arab forces.

Bible students and others religiously inclined would be quick to see in the developments the beginning of fulfillment of the old prophecy that the Holy Land would one day be returned to the Jews, that they wound one day become a nation again, with their own flag, their own land, their own government.

SURPLUSES:
Curbs Are Sought

Fearful of large surpluses of wheat and cotton, the government was studying moves to prevent this contingency.

Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan outlined to a senate agriculture committee plans to hold down this year's cotton and wheat crops.

Brannon's plan called for serving notice on wheat and cotton farmers that the 1949 crops they plant will not be considered part of their average production in figuring any future acreage allotments. This means growers could plant fewer acres without being penalized later by proportionate acreage curbs on their crops.

Under present law, if acreage controls are renewed, the average acreage planted by a farmer in the five previous years is the amount he is entitled to plant.

Many officials felt that might induce many farmers to plant as much as they can in order to have the maximum possible acreage when and if controls are clamped on.

Brannan's plan, assuring the farmer of no restrictive penalties through curtailment of acreage, was seen as a possible curb on any excessive planting.

About as large a winter wheat crop as possible already has been planted and a committee member declared cotton farmers are preparing to plant an "extra large crop" to get benefit of present high support prices.

Chairman Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) of the committee which heard Brannan, said legislation to back up Brannon's proposal would be offered in congress.

HURRY-UP MEASURE

Priority Ordered for Rent Curb Bill

Speed was of the essence. Rent controls had to be safeguarded swiftly. So, into the senate hopper fell an administration bill calling for broader and tougher rent controls for another two years.

The bill, authorized by Senator Maybank, (D., S. C.) and, in the house by Representative Spence (D., Ky.) would continue controls through March 31, 1951, and would give the federal housing expediter powers he does not have now. These would include authority to re-impose rent ceilings on previously-decontrolled areas and on other specified types of living quarters. Restored also would be right to control evictions, to sue for triple damages following overcharges, and to take criminal action against willful violators.

New Trefoil May Answer Problems

Italian birdsfoot trefoil, a broad-leaved variety now under test in the United States, may be the answer to the trefoil seed problems—the seed, being difficult to harvest, is expensive and has been limited in this country.

Winter hardiness and early vigorous spring growth are points in favor of the Italian variety, according to Indiana and Illinois experiment stations.

R. F. Fuelleman, agronomist, says the variety may prove satisfactory for southern Illinois but further tests are necessary to determine its suitability for other areas, and there is some indication that it may be more vunerable to leaf hoppers than other varieties.

Not Quite Imperishable

Although diamonds rate high among the hardest and most imperishable of all known substances, they are composed of pure carbon and are affected by heat at temperatures ranging from 1,400 to 1,607 degrees Fahrenheit.

It is impossible to burn them in an ordinary fire, but it can easily be done with a blow torch and sometimes in an extensive conflagration such as the San Francisco fire in 1906, where temperatures as high as 2,200 degrees were reached.

The diamond is found only in single crystals and, when reduced to dust, it is as black as any other carbon.

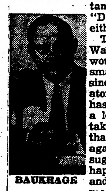
Politicians Settling Down To Practical Things Again

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON. — With the migthy fanfare of the Democrats on inauguration day a fading memory and even the brave words of the Republicans on Lincoln Day less than a whisper out of the past, the practical politicians on both sides of the aisles in the house and senate are hard at their practical politicking.

The sudden re-entrance of Governor Dewey on the political scene was something that took many of his fellow Republicans by surprise. Nevertheless, it would seem that many who don't like him because he lost last November and others who didn't like him enough to help him win last November, are willing to change their minds and really work for his election to the senate in 1950. They think he has a chance for the seat which Senator Wagner has held so long.



BAUKHAGE

There is a tendency on the part of Democrats to shrug off this distant possibility with "Dewey can't do that either!"

To take on Senator Wagner in his prime would have been no small venture. But since the aging Senator from New York has been ill for such a long period it is taken for granted that he will not run again in 1950. It is suggested that perhaps his son, an up and coming young man in his own right, might attempt to fill his father's shoes.

That is always good political practice, for more than one candidate with a former hero's name, has been swept into office by voters who either didn't know their idol had departed or else thought a candidate by any other name couldn't smell as sweet. It was often declared that a number of old-timers had a vague feeling that FDR and TR were, if not the same, at least approximately the same person.

Meanwhile the Republicans are rapidly solidifying their forces for a concentrated battle over the repeal of the Taft-Hartley bill, and the way the atmosphere feels at this writing, Republican senators are offering the nearest thing to a fillibuster that can be offered without actually being labelled one. Senator Pepper called it that from the start.

April is contract day for a good many unions and the race is to get the Taft-Hartley act off the books before then. If the Republicans can keep on amending and arguing past that date, it will be a distinct, if only temporary, victory for them.

It must have been quite a shock for the labor leaders to learn that the administration didn't think that labor won the election. Labor did a tremendous job for Truman, put in a lot of hard, fast cooperative work, dovetailing their programs with the efforts of the regular party workers.

But one Harry Truman did a lot of work, all by himself. When the A. F. of L. and CIO heads came down to Washington early in January laying their demands on the line they were somewhat annoyed to find a number of top Democrats polite, grateful and gracious, but also just a little coy.

INAUGURAL COLOR FADES
Back to practical politicking

Newsmen outside one office door when an A. F. of L. delegation was waiting for members of Senator Thomas' labor and public welfare committee, heard much desk-pounding and one voice was strong enough to penetrate the thick panelling:

> "We went up and down the country ballyhooing for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley act. And that's what we want now."

But the practical politicians in the house and the senate knew they were facing the fight of their lives. They knew they could count on some Republican support, but only if they sent down a bill which had something in it beside straight repeal. That is why the administration ordered a "one-package" measure, one that contained certain positive provisions. The unions were willing to let the old Wagner act come back into force, but the administration knew that was the wrong approach since there was considerable popular sentiment against undoing all that had been done in the way of scotching strikes.

Shake-Up Hits Probe Committee

One of the interesting changes wrought by the election was the reorganization of the un-American activities committee. This strange child, born of a desire of one Democratic congressman to check Nazi and anti-Jewish activity in this country back in the days of Hitler had become a problem child for the administration.

The father of the idea (it was a New York congressman), saw his offspring kidnapped at birth. It was seized by Republican Hamilton Fish of New York and later by Rep. Martin Dies of Texas and brought up in quite a different manner from what was intended.

The Democrats were pretty embarrased with the commitee before Dies was through with it, and when he decided to withdraw from the Washington scene they tried to squelch it but failed. It had proved too good a headline-getter for its members. Then along came the Republicans in 1946 and grabbed it, making it one of the administration's number one headaches.

As soon as Democrats returned to power they saw to it that the committee, now an accepted institution, was cleaned up. By one twist and another, they managed to eliminate all of the old members but one, Representative Wood, who is chairman. Membership was limited to lawyers, which was logical enough, for its faults were those which no honest lawyer would condone, and it was reformed to recognize civil rights and to conform to some of the fundamental principles of justice and civil rights with which the original organization scorned to bother. Witnesses are now permitted to give their side of the case, be represented by counsel if they desire.

Nothing has been done to hamper its effectiveness, and it should be able to render a real service from now on. As Rep. John McSweeney (D., Ohio) one of the new members, said: "The spy hunt should be carried to a logical conclusion, but I will not permit innocent men and women to have their names and characters besmirched by unfounded and unsupported accusations."

The un-American activities committee, as it was run before it was cleaned up, was an institution which simply could not continue to exist in America. It used methods which Americans will not tolerate, because if there is one thing an American demands, it is the right to be considered innocent until he is proved guilty. "Who steals my purse steals my trash. . . . but he that filches my good name robs me of that which not enriches him and makes me poor indeed."

* * *

Commies at Work In Ivied Halls

One of the jobs which the committee under J. Parnell Thomas, was preparing to do was to investigate communism in American colleges. That sent the universities and colleges into jitters for fear academic freedom would be throttled as other fredoms had been by the fanatical members of the old group. However, there is no reason at all why a judicial investigation of this particular subject shouldn't be undertaken.

Canada received a distinct shock recently from Dr. Watson Kirkconnell, president of Acadia university. He made an analysis of the report of the Labor Progressive Party university students conference at Toronto last fall which was published by the SATURDAY NIGHT, a weekly magazine published in Toronto.

The report is a 14,000 word document which presents the Communists' own views on their position, in Canadian universities. It reveals, according to Dr. Kirkconnell, that there are militant Communist "nuclei" on the campuses at McGill, Toronto, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton, and Vancouver, all under rigid party discipline.

There are known to be a number of similiar groups, doubtless working with the same party techniques, in this country. In some places they are considerably weaker than they used to be.

Lincoln as the Loneliest Man

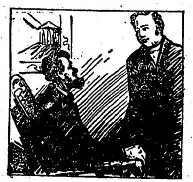
"I AM the loneliest man in America." These words dropped from the lips of Abraham Lincoln one evening in 1863, that period which was so dark and unpromising for the cause of the Union.

In March, 1863, writes W. H. Smith in the Washington Post, I heard the incident related to a small group of distinguished men by Bishop Ames of the Methodist church. I do not know if it has ever appeared in print, but if it has, it is worth retelling. The narration took place in the National Hotel, in Washington, in a suite of rooms then occupied by John Evans, territorial governor of Colorado, and father of Evanston, Chicago's beautiful suburb. My presence is accounted for by the fact that Governor Evans was a relative and I had called to pay my respects.

In the group were two or three Methodist bishops, a member of the senate and two of the house. I am sure no one who heard it related ever forgot it, or the impressive manner of the bishop. President Lincoln and the bishop were warm personal friends, and the President had employed the bishop on some delicate mission connected with the war. The bishop said that one evening in June, 1863, he went to the White House to call on the President. The President was in a very despondent mood. Hooker had just suffered his defeat at Chancellorsville. The conversation lasted until a late hour of the night.

The President reviewed the situation at length. The war had been going on for two years, and the North had made little material progress. The bishop asked if he despaired of a final victory. His response was made with great earnestness:

"No. I dare not despair when I know there is a God who controls the affairs of nations as He does those of individuals, but the thought of the thousands who must yet be slain is appalling."

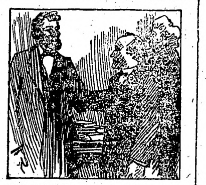


"I Dare Not Despair When I Know There Is a God."

It was then he uttered the words with which this article begins. He said: "I am the loneliest man in America. There is no one to whom I can go and unload my troubles, assured of sympathy and help."

He spoke of the quibbling, complaining and fault finding in congress, and the harsh and unjust criticisms heaped upon him. He spoke with extreme heat of what he termed "that meddlesome body," the committee on the conduct of war.

The President rapidly reviewed Grant's record since he joined the army. He was at Cairo with a small force. He urgently asked permission to move, saying he would win a victory. The consent was long delayed, but it came at last. Within two or three hours his men were on the steamers, and the brilliant victory of Belmont followed.



"Grant," He Said, "Fights, and That Is What I Want."

It was not a great victory, for the forces engaged were not large, but it was a beginning and showed the mettle of Grant.

Back to Cairo, with a larger force he again and again urged for permission to move, and when the permission came he rushed his men to the steamers, and three days later he captured Fort Henry. Not delaying an hour he pushed his small force across the country to Fort Donelson. He was not dismayed by the fact that the force in the fort was larger than his own, but immediately locked the doors on that force. When the rest of his men reached him, by a series of brilliant assaults, he captured, not alone the fort, but an army almost equal in number to his own.

At Shiloh, unlike any other general, he remained to fight after his disaster on the first day, he made no effort to get the remains of his army across the river, but at daylight the next morning became the attacking party, winning a victory. He was now at Vicksburg, and complaints of his delay were many. Only that day two senators had urged Lincoln to displace Grant, but he would not do it. "Grant," he said, "fights, and that is what I want." He said Grant had promised him he would capture Vicksburg by the fourth of July, and he intended to give him the opportunity.

The President, with deep earnestness, then declared: "When he captures Vicksburg, I will find some way to boost him over the heads of all others, and give him command of all the armies. With Grant in command, by Jinks!" (his favorite explețive) "the armies will move and move to some purpose. He fights."

"Rock Hound"

An oil field term for a geologist is a "rock hound." He acquires this appellation because he looks rocks and ranges over like a coon dog. Another descriptive name for the scientist is a "pebble puppy".

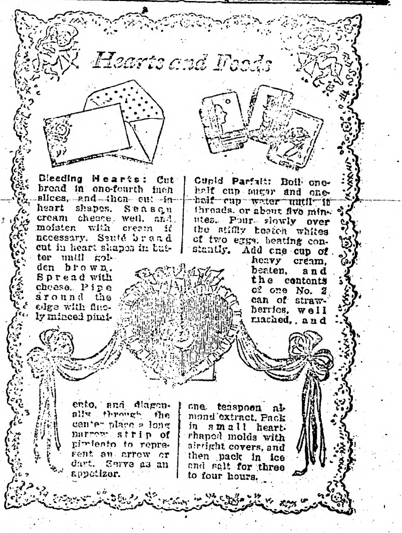
LINCOLN

Wise with the wisdom of ages,
Shrewd as the man of trade,
Grim as the prophets and sages,
Keen as a damask blade;

Firm as a granite-ribbed mountain,
Tender as woman's song,
Gay as a scintillant fountain—
Yet was he oaken-strong.

Here, the wonder of eons:
Born into pain and strife;
Dead, with a thousand paeons
Deathless, he enters life.

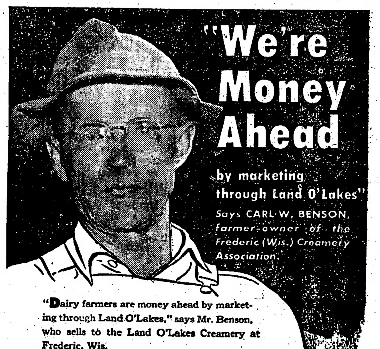
—Thomas Curtis Clark, in Rural New-Yorker.



Hearts and Foods

Bleeding Hearts: Cut bread in one-fourth inch slices, and then cut in heart shapes. Season cream cheese well, and moisten with cream if necessary. Sauté bread cut in heart shapes in butter until golden brown. Spread with cheese. Pipe around the edge with finely minced pimiento, and diagonally through the center place a long narrow strip of pimiento to represent an arrow or dart. Serve as an appetizer.

Cupid Parfait: Boil one-half cup sugar and one-half cup water until it threads, or about five minutes. Pour slowly over the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs, beating constantly. Add one cup of heavy cream, beaten, and the contents of one No. 2 can of strawberries, well mashed, and one teaspoon almond extract. Pack in small heart-shaped molds with airtight covers, and then pack in ice and salt for three to four hours.



"We're Money Ahead by marketing through Land O'Lakes"
Says CARL W. BENSON, farmer-owner of the Frederic (Wis.) Creamery Association.
"Dairy farmers are money ahead by marketing through Land O'Lakes," says Mr. Benson, who sells to the Land O'Lakes Creamery at Frederic, Wis.
"Over the years, farmers get the best deal all around from Land O'Lakes." That's because farmers share in the savings at three levels—manufacture, distribution and sales.
"Everything the members do to help Land O'Lakes to prosper," testifies Mr. Benson, "means we are helping ourselves to prosper because Land O'Lakes belongs to us, the farmers."

Duke Gets His Tractor
Duke Thomas bought a farm with the money he'd saved in the Service, but he couldn't get a tractor. He needed it badly, but was tenth on the local dealer's list.
"Tell you what," old man Peters says. "If those nine fellows ahead of you agree, you'll get the next one I get in." "No, thanks," says Duke, "I'll just take my turn."
But old Peters mails out nine postcards. And the other day he tells Duke his tractor will be in next week. "I simply wrote the facts to the fellows ahead of you. They decided it."
From where I sit, it's that spirit of understanding that helps make our democracy so great. Understanding for the other fellow's problems and respect for the other fellow's rights—whether it's his right to earn a living, his right to cast his vote against your candidate, or even his right to enjoy a moderate, friendly glass of beer or ale—if and when he chooses. Let's always keep it that way!

Annular Eclipse

A certain type of eclipse of the sun is called an "annular" eclipse. In such an eclipse the moon appears to be slightly smaller than the sun, so that when the moon moves in front of the sun a narrow ring or "annulus" of light is visible around the moon. This is different than a total eclipse in which the moon completely covers the sun.

Grimm to Talk at Winter Shows

George Grimm, the globe-trotting columnist of the Minneapolis Tribune, has just returned from Berlin and will speak on the subject "I Flew to Berlin" on February, 23, at the Red River Valley Winter Shows at Crookston. Mr. Grimm is a dynamic speaker and his message will be of commanding interest.

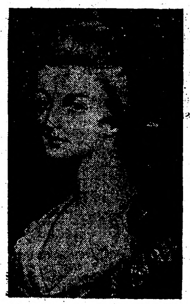
Mother of Our First President

THE girl who was to become the mother of George Washington was something of a belle in her native colony, Virginia. Mary Ball descended from a good English family, was called "the rose of Epping Forest" in her girlhood, Epping Forest being the name of the Ball homestead. Orphaned early, she had as her guardian George Eskridge, a wealthy Virginia planter.

At twenty-two, Mary Ball married (on March 6, 1730) Augustine Washington, then a widower with two little boys. Her first child she named George after her old family friend. Five other children were born of this marriage, four of whom survived. When Augustine Washington died, she was left with a brood of youngsters to care for. George was then only eleven. Fortunately, however, states a writer in the Indianapolis News, the husband had provided for them amply.

George Washington was still a young boy when he became possessed of a great desire to be a midshipman. His mother had been half-hearted about this plan at all times, but finally (so the story goes) when his sea-chest was being carried down to the wharf by a porter, she refused to let him go. He accepted her decision with good grace, and devoted himself to surveying instead. His activities in the next years often took him far away from her and gradually prepared him for the great role he was to play in American history.

Mary Ball Washington was sixty-eight when the revolution began. Since communication was then so primitive, she often did not know for months at a time whether her son was alive or dead. Yet she maintained outward calm and courage. One of her sayings was, "The mothers and wives of brave men must be brave women." The members of her household knew, though, that every day she went off by herself with her Bible to a quiet spot called Meditation Rock.



Mary Ball at 22, When She Wed Augustine Washington.

At last Cornwallis surrendered in 1781 and the revolution was won. Ever mindful of his mother's anxiety for him, Washington sent off a courier at once to bear her the news.

Mary Ball Washington lived to be over eighty, mentally keen and unfailingly cheerful. She died in 1789, the year her son was elected first President of the United States.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Rejects Stalin Peace Talks; Norway Prefers Western Alliance, Spurns Russian Council Suggestion

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

SOVIET "BARKIS" . . . Like the Dickens character, Russia's Premier Josef Stalin was "willing" to meet with President Truman to talk peace. But the question was: how willing? He is shown above with President Truman when the two met at Potsdam.

WANTS OPEN DISCUSSION

Truman Won't Talk Behind Iron Curtain

It was beginning to look like "Uncle Joe" Stalin and Harry S. Truman never would get together for a talk looking toward settlement of U. S. and other western powers' differences with the Soviets.

"Meet Stalin behind the iron curtain?" Secretary of State Dean Acheson snorted in disdain, declared in effect that the idea was preposterous.

Acheson went further. He asserted indirectly that the Russian leader was playing politics with peace hopes of millions of people.

Anyway, Acheson went on, what might be gained? Hadn't the Russians consistently blocked all efforts in the United Nations looking toward disarmament, control of the atom bomb and creation of a U. N. police force?

BUT THE U. S. couldn't be put in the position of appearing disinclined even to talk about peace, so Acheson left the door open for a parley; but there were some American conditions this time. The White House, it appeared, would be willing to see Stalin—in Washington. Stalin had said he'd be willing to see Truman—behind the iron curtain, and there the matter stood.

Acheson made a further point. The U. S., in any event, would not discuss with Russia alone any points having a direct interest to other nations.

As for a "peace" declaration, Acheson declard he found this puzzling inasmuch as Russia, the U S., and all other U. N. members are already pledged "by most solemn treaty commitments not to engage in war with one another."

HE ADDED that the hopes of the world's peoples for peace are considered by this nation to be fundamental, and that the United States would not play politics with these hopes.

While it might appear an oversimplification of the problem, many might raise the question that if Acheson is relying on Russia's U. N. pledge to keep the peace, why should there be any official U. S. concern over the entire Russian relations puzzle?

The fact there is grave concern over the puzzle indicates Mr. Acheson may have been talking when he should have been thinking.

U. N. Facilities Offered If Truman, Stalin Meet

The United Nations stands ready to aid in any way it can in any East-West talks, according to a statement by Trygve Lie, secretary-general of the organization.

Lie declared he would be "most happy" to have U. N. facilities used for a conference between Josef Stalin and President Truman if the two leaders were to suggest it.

Beyond that he would not go in commenting on the interview in which Stalin said he would be glad to confer directly with President Truman on a possible Soviet-American peace pact.

He added that the U. N. has several facilities which might be used advantageously in the event of such a conference.

NORWAY:
Standing Pat

Norway was drawing no cards. Standing pat, she would play the ones she had.

IN OTHER WORDS, the Norwegians wanted nothing but friendship with the Soviets, but if it were all the same, they would rather depend upon security in regional pacts such as the proposed north Atlantic alliance, than upon an alignment with the Soviet union.

The position stated by Norway was in answer to a Soviet note asking the nation's clarification of its view on the proposed north Atlantic setup.

Norway said the United Nations had failed to provide the world with peace and security, and her own people's "serious concern" for their liberty had convinced the government that it was necessary to seek increased security through regional cooperation in the defense field.

BUT THE NORWEGIAN government assured the Russians that it would never agree to foreign bases on its soil "as long as Norway is not attacked or the subject of threats of attack." And the government pledged itself to support a policy of non-aggression.

The decision could be interpreted no other way than as a definite setback for Soviet expansion-by-intimidation policies. Norway is a small country and vulnerable to Soviet attack. Nevertheless, it has chosen to stand with the western nations—a decision certain to impair Russian prestige and to show the way, in some measure, at least, how other Soviet-threatened nations may find the way out of a seeming impasse.

MORE CLOTHES:
British Ration Eased

Great Britain has ended eight years of clothes rationing—practically, that is.

Effective now, any Briton with the money may go into any store and buy a suit of clothes, his wife a dress. And for the first time since January 1, 1940, he won't have to give 26 clothing coupons for the suit, 18 for his wife's dress. coupons, however, will still be required for many articles of clothing.

PRESS FREEDOM:
Losing Ground?

Newspapermen and radiocasters from Sauk Center to Gotham would shout "foul!," claim the opposition was hitting below the belt.

A Baltimore criminal court judge held three local radio stations and the news editor of one were guilty of contempt of court because they violated a court rule that restricts publication of crime news.

THE JUDGE, John B. Gray, Jr., held, in a two-hour verbal opinion that broadcasts of information about a convicted murderer, before his trial last summer, constituted not only a clear and present danger to the fair administration of justice, but "an obstruction to justice" in the accused's right to a fair trial.

The court agreed with a defense contention that the nine-year old rule was an "abridgement of the freedom of the press," but asserted such an abridgement "is justified because it conflicts with an equally potent constitutional right of an accused to a fair trial."

NEW SHUTTER:
Powerfully Fast

A new fluid eyelid for a camera can blink and take a picture in 1-25 of a millionth of a second. This eyelid is an electrical shutter with no moving parts. It's fast enough to see any one of 25 things happening within a millionth of a second.

THE SHUTTER is a murky fluid that blocks light. Two electrical contants are immersed in it. When a current is passed through, the liquid becomes transparent for an instant—as if a bottle of ink became water clear.

The photographic plate is exposed to the action in front of the shutter for only the fraction of time when the liquid is clear. The length of exposure is governed by the voltage applied. The shutter offers a new way of slowing the action.

The shutter was announced at the winter meeting of the American institute of electrical engineers by A. M. Zaren, Stanford research institute, Los Angeles, and F. R. Marshall and F. L. Poole, U. S. naval ordnance test station.

AMONG OTHER war-inspired devices being used in industry, the "snooper-scope," which could "see" a man in the dark a quarter of a mile away, now is being used to find faults in power transmission lines. It spotted the enemy by his body heat as it was supersensible.

Army, Navy, Marines Join In Big Caribbean Maneuver

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—About the time these lines are in print, 35,000 American soldiers, sailors, fliers and marines and a hundred ships will be shoving off for the greatest peacetime maneuvers in our history. Providence permitting, your correspondent will be on the s-

A strange and sinister "aggressive force" which will have seized and fortified the island of Vieques in the Caribbean will be bombarded by sea and air, attacked and (we trust) captured by a joint marine corps and army expeditionary force landed by navy ships and planes which have fought their way past enemy planes, and submarines.

BAUKHAGE

The purpose of this undertaking is officially described as "to advance and insure combat readiness for Fleet Marine Force Atlantic units, and to provide amphibious training for Army and Marine Corps units."

Admiral W. H. P. Blandy, commander-in-cheief of the Atlantic fleet will be in over-all command. Lieut. Gen. Keller E. Rockey, USMC, will command the joint marine corps and army expeditionary troops which will be composed of the second marine division and the 65th infantry, Caribbean command.

Many of these men are veterans of Pacific landings and the North African operations, but, the experts tell me, there are many things to be learned for great progress has been made in amphibious training since the war.

This is the first operation of its kind since the merger of the armed services has been in effect, and nothing approaching it in size has ever been attempted in peacetime.

Of course the marine corps was virtually born amphibious and for the past 28 years has perfected the methods which were used in the late war. Now they serve as the instructors in this particular field of activity for the other branches of the service.

Maneuvers which get comparatively little notice in the press are largely regarded by laymen as a spectacle or as a series of highly technical military problems which are too complicated to follow. As a matter of fact, the actual maneuvers are a small part of the operation compared to the planning which dates back to the days when Caesar took his famous tenth legion from small boats onto the soil of ancient Britain, or before.

Perhaps the earliest important invasion from the sea in modern times was one of the most unsuccessful - - - the ill-fated Gallipoli battle when the British troops were almost annihilated in their first attempt to invade Turkey in World War I.

Intensive study of this debacle was made in this country, and the marines had made great strides long before World War II made such training necessary. Very few people realized this. In fact, many people probably think that the Japs had a special patent on amphibious tactics.

As one officer expressed it to me, there is nothing secret about this method of fighting. It is simply a question of "know-how." A vast conglomeration of minute detail which is not used at all in ordinary land fighting. For example, an infantryman takes for granted that he and his rifle are more or less one piece. But the first time he has to go over the side of a ship and into a small craft, he suddenly finds he is faced with a major problem in assuring not only his own arrival on the beach but, what is equally important, the simultaneous arrival of his gun. If you have ever tried to crawl down a net with no equipment whatever, you realize it requires all the hands you have.

But long before D-day, thousands of details have been worked out hundreds of miles from the scene of action. As one officer put it, the stack of charts that have to be drawn are a mile high. Beans, bullets, shoelaces—all are part of the picture quite as much as radar and range-finders.

The little island of Vieques will be pounded with tons of shells, hauled, mauled, captured, and deserted, and then go back to a subtropical siesta. But what happens there on and before March 2 and 3, 1949, may be of vital importance a decade hence.

A New Truman Going to Work

As the Ides of March approach, the new administration swings into its stride with a good deal of honeymoon fervor still in the air. From the day of the first White House press and radio conference after the inauguration, it was clear that we had a new President.

Washington reporters had become used to several Harry Trumans. There was the very grave and not very certain man who was called in 1945 to a job which he didn't want and never expected to have with the shadow of tragedy over him. A man who was at first so anxious to reassure the country that there would be no break in the continuity of leadership that he sometimes rushed in where a more experienced man might have feared to tread.

There were many "off-the-cuff" remarks with some disastrous results. Then came a period when he leaned over backward with caution; after that, the period when his own party seemed to be falling apart and it was no secret that the man in the White House was disappointed and unhappy.

Then came a gradual change which even many of his intimates did not realize, a change that gradually culminated in the combative confidence which most of his supporters failed to share. Washington watched his election campaign with considerable admiration for his fighting spirit but without being convinced that even he, himself actually had the confidence he displayed.

Then came the election upset and two months later, the tremendous turnout at the inauguration. There was evidence for those who could recognize it, in the manner of delivery of his inauguration speech, that here was still another Truman. At that first press and radio conference, it was plain enough. At last he was his own man. He felt he had earned his office. He probably had felt all along that he was fully competent to carry on its responsibilities. But now something had been added: a controlled self-assurance.

I think Mr. Truman was sincere when he told a luncheon meeting of the Democratic party's finance committee that there were a million men in the United States who would make a better President, but it was his job and he would carry it out. He was simply saying that he realized there were men in the country with greater ability than he had. He didn't say, nor did he think, that he didn't have enough ability. If events prove that he hasn't, he probably will be the first to admit it.

That is my own interpretation and is offered for what it is worth. It is an expression based not only on what Harry Truman has said and done, but largely on the way he has said and done it. If he continues to handle himself in the way he has since the election, the men in government and out, in his own party and out of it, will find him a lot easier to deal with. Likewise, he is going to be proportionately more successful with those with whom he has to deal.

Press Conferences Have Changed, Too

At a recent White House news conference, an old timer came up to me and remarked that the last few times he had attended these gatherings, all of which had been especially well attended (well over 100 reporters) he couldn't help thinking back to the days of Taft when, as he put it, Robert Small of the Associated Press and perhaps one or two others who used to be sneaked into the back door of the White House for confidential talks with the President, but no other newsmen or women had any access whatever to the Chief Executive.

I was not in Washington then but later I came to know Small very well and I know he was known as "the fair haired boy" of the Taft administration. It was the first time I had ever heard the expression. Small was a brilliant newsman and Taft was very fond of him. I well recall the ex-President (Taft was then chief justice) comforting Small's father at Bob's funeral. The former White House reporter was comparatively young when he died.

I do not know how the press corps felt about Small's intimate relationship with the White House—or the other fortunate ones who were given these exclusive privileges but I doubt if it occurred to anyone to suggest the possibility of having regular open press conferences. Teddy Roosevelt, however, did call in press association men on occasion.

And yet such a situation (no regular conference) seems incredible today. No President would dare refuse to see newsfolk and stand up to questions which sometimes are more impertinent than pertinent.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: "When we moved into our apartment, we purchased from the previous tenant the inlaid linoleum on the kitchen floor. The quality is excellent, but the color is a dirty gray-green in a marbleized pattern. Is there any product which will stain or dye the linoleum (not paint) so that we can get a deep blue tone and still retain the marbleized effect?"

ANSWER: I do not know of any stain or dye for that purpose. But you may be able to get the effect that you want by stippling in two colors, or else by applying a "spatter-dash" finish. For the stippling, first cut a large sponge in half. Apply an oil floor paint of the background color that you wish on the floor. When this has dried, paint a section of clean board with a second color that you will use for stippling, press the flat, cut side of the sponge on this fresh paint, and then press this on the linoleum. The pattern of the cut sponge thus will be transferred to the floor.

For a spatter-dash effect, use a stick and a brush with a rather long bristle. Dip the brush into the paint and wipe off the excess. Strike the brush ferrule against the stick so that the paint will come off in drops on the floor. (The floor should already be painted with the background color.) Try these methods first on pieces of boards to get the knack. See that the linoleum is absolutely clean and dry before you start to paint, no grease or wax.

Washington's Colonial Home

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S colonial home, Mount Vernon, has not been a residence for many years, nor has it been owned by a member of the Washington family for three quarters of a century, says the Washington Star.

Mrs. Eleanor Washington Howard, daughter of John Augustine Washington, the illustrious Washington's great-grandnephew, was the last private owner of the estate. She first saw the world from the most historic home in America in 1856.

Though General Washington's slaves, numbering more than 150, were freed by his will, his nephew, Bushrod Washington, who inherited Mount Vernon, John Augustine Washington Bushrod's nephew, and his son, John Augustine Washington, Jr., who in turn fell heirs to the estate, were slave owners.

Today, survivors of the last generation of negro folk born in the slave quarters of the old manor are proud that their slave parents served in the ancestral home of the Washingtons. Somehow, they give realism to the farm which George Washington owned and which they helped to care for, as young men. These white-haired men declare there never was any depression at the old farm where the nights were festivals with the singing of "Roll, Jordan, Roll," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and "Steal Away to Jesus."

George Washington, who is said to have been worth several hundred thousand dollars in today's values, had a salary of $25,000 a year during his presidency and added resources brought to him by his marriage with the rich Martha Custis. With such wealth he was able to keep his estate of 8,000 acres in fine condition. This was despite the fact that he was constantly entertaining visitors.

By the time the property was inherited by John Augustine Washington, his nephew, in 1829, the plantation had been reduced to 1,225 acres, only about 100 acres of which were suitable for farming. When his son, John Augustine Washington Jr., came into possession of the estate in 1860, after his mother's death, he realized that such wealth as his great-uncle George had possessed was required to restore Mount Vernon and maintain it in its former splendor.

According to tradition a Miss Ann Pamela Cunningham of South Carolina, who was a Potomac boat passenger about the time when John A. Washington wished to sell Mount Vernon, became so impressed with the tolling of the bell and the historical importance of George Washington's home that she became active in working for the purchase of the estate.

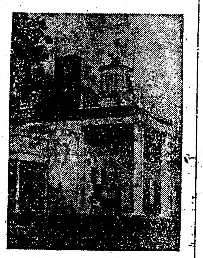
In 1858 the organization she had formed as the Mount Vernon Ladies' association of the Union contracted to buy the mansion and the patriotic appeal of the women and the efforts of Senator Edward Everett of Massachusetts, who toured the country and raised $68,294.59, Mount Vernon was actually purchased in 1859 for a shrine. Then the Washington family left the estate.

With breaking out of the Civil war, Miss Cunningham appealed to the commanders of both armies to preserve Mount Vernon. As both General Scott and General Lee gave orders that no armed man should enter the estate, the shrine was self-protected, the only neutral spot in the United States.

For several years members of at least four families of the Mt. Vernon slaves remained to care for the place, in the employ of the association. Some of the children grew up there and a few of the adults stayed long enough to gain the title of "aunty" or "uncle," which was a typical Southern respect for an aged negro.

For a while after the war visitors to Mount Vernon are said to have practiced such vandalism that they wrote their names over its walls and ceilings. Plaster was removed by those who cut pieces of laths as souvenirs, and even glass was broken in the cupola by those who wished to take away pieces of the famous home.

Today Mount Vernon, a national shrine, is a perfectly preserved plantation with mansion, greenhouse, kitchen, servant's quarters, coach house, smoke house, dairy, spinning house, carpenter's house, gardener's house and plantation office.



Washington's Colonial Home Now a National Shrine.

Perhaps the estate's closest touch with Washington are the beautiful trees in the grounds near the mansion which were planted either by General Washington or by his direction.

If the ancient ashes, beeches, buckeyes, hemlocks, coffee beans, elms, lindens, mulberry and the many venerable holly trees could speak, they would tell much about George Washington's life as a country gentleman.

* * *

America's most famous home, Mount Vernon, underwent not one but two major enlargements during the ownership of the First American who believed apparently, that the first duty of an American citizen to his family was to provide a comfortable home, according to a writer in the Washington Post.

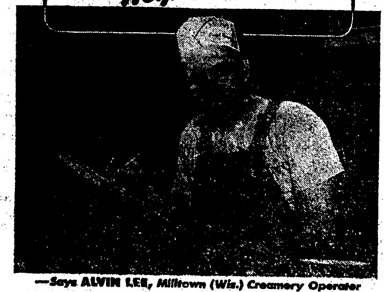
When first built, about 1743, the Virginia home was an unpretentious plantation house of one and one-half stories, comprising the central section of the present mansion.

Just before his marriage to Martha Custis in 1759, Washington "renovized" the dwelling into a house of two and one-half stories by adding one complete story, but did not increase the floor area.

Nail File for Canaries

Toenails of canary birds must be clipped regularly if the birds are to do their best singing, but clipping by hand often injures the feet. An automatic nail file should be used.

"Efficient Creameries Help Farmers"



—Says ALVIN LEE, Milltown (Wis.) Creamery Operator
"I can run a more efficient plant for our farmers because Land O'Lakes experts keep me posted on the newest and best methods," says Mr. Lee, who operates the Land O'Lakes Creamery at Milltown, Wisconsin.
"As an operator in Land O'Lakes creamery," he says, "I have an incentive to produce better quality butter which brings higher prices on the market."
Creameries and their farmer-owners share alike in the savings of cooperative manufacture, distribution, and sales when they work through Land O'Lakes.

Pioneer Has Birthday Today

Today another milestone has been reached for a grand old lady of our community, Mrs. Paul Olson, who is 84 years old. Many neighbors and friends are paying her tribute today. Mrs. Olson is of the pioneer class of this community and has many friends throughout the entire county. Her large circle of friends can be attributed partly to her untiring efforts in early days in helping those who were ill and up until the past 15 years lived under the constant strain of being called upon to assist at the birth of a baby. She is at present failing in strengh and her daughter Dorothy has been with her the past few years to take care of her.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Church Raps Mindszenty Verdict; Dewey Dons Attire of Liberalism; People Checked Inflation Threat

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MINDSZENTY:

Gets Life Term

The trial of Cardinal Mindszenty, primate of Hungary, was over and the verdict came as no surprise. The Cardinal was sentenced to life imprisonment on charges of treason and black marketing. If there were an unexpected element in the outcome it was that he was spared.

But at trial's end even that hung in the balance. Cardinal Mindszenty still could lose his life. Under Hungarian law, while his sentence of life could be appealed, the supreme peoples tribunal, last court of appeal, could increase the severity of the sentence which, in this case, could mean only death.

THE CARDINAL was doomed from the outset. His plight had so stirred the Christian world that denunciations of the Hungarian government's actions were almost universal. Powerful western nations, through their leading churchmen, had attacked the trial procedure and this, in turn, had incensed the Communist-dominated Hungarian court to a point where the issue was never in doubt.

It was generally believed that it was only reluctance to make a martyr out of the Cardinal that averted the death penalty.

Hungary lost no time in assailing American representatives who actually, or purportedly, sided with the cardinal. Among targets of these attacks were Cardinal Spellman, of New York, who delivered a scathing sermon against prosecution of Mindszenty, and Selden Chapin, U. S. envoy to Hungary.

AMONG OTHER THINGS, Cardinal Mindszenty was accused of gathering information for Chapin in a scheme to overthrow the Hungarian government. Chapin immediately branded this charge as "pure fantasy."

General opinion was that in the prosecution of the Cardinal Russian communism had made its first great blunder. For in the move was discerned the fact that religion and religious concepts—whether Catholic or Protestant—would not be permitted to stand in the way of Soviet aims.

The Russians had resurrected a policy which once before had so alarmed them that they had forsworn it. But now they were publicly and dramatically recommitted to it—a policy of the Kremlin versus Christ, and this time the Soviet Union was up against an adversary for whom there can be no defeat.

INFLATION:

People Curbed It

The people, themselves, can claim major credit for the recent check to national inflation.

That is the conclusion of the family economics bureau of the Northwestern National Life Insurance company which conducted a study of the subject.

THE STUDY developed that a slowdown, halt, or reverse of six main factors in the 76 per cent rise from pre-war price levels had been brought about.

It found that as late as last September, the public still was bidding frantically against each other for more goods than were being produced in many lines. But in the final two months of 1948, consumers suddenly quit trying to outbid each other.

With industrial production in high gear and comparatively free from interruptions, output and available supplies of most consumer goods were gaining steadily.

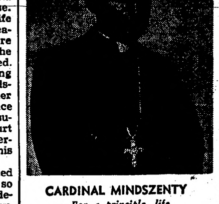
Government bidding for grain in Europe, which ran grain prices up to record heights last year, slowed down as world grain production recovered.

THE LONG RISE in wage-costs-per-unit of goods was slowing down, the study said.

Continuing its listing of the six factors, the study reported that rapid expansion in money supply, both cash and credit, due to vast government borrowing, had also slowed down.

Borrowing by business for expansion was listed as the sixth factor which was slowed down because of tightened restrictions.

But the first and foremost cause of the current price deflation, the study concludes, has been the halt in the public's scramble for goods. By trimming their demands to fit within available supplies, the people have recaptured some of their normal control over prices.



CARDINAL MINDSZENTY
For a principle, life

GOP'S DEWEY:

New Liberalism

For a man who was strangely reticent about plans while seeking the presidency of the United States, New York's Thomas E. Dewey turned vocal and voluble in his Lincoln Day address in Washington.

In the diminutive governor's remarks there was no apology for defeat and no supine bid for favor. Instead, he lashed out vigorously against party policy and advocated a purge of "anti-liberals" from GOP ranks.

That there was a noticeable paradox in his position apparently disturbed him not at all. While crying for those who oppose "liberal progressive" policies to get out of the party, he struck out also at New Dealish elements inside the organization.

Urging his party to stop bemoaning the past, he recommended that it dedicate itself anew to forward-looking programs of social progress but without "trying to outbid the Democrats with the public money."

It was Dewey's first public address since his defeat last November, and in it he reminded his listeners that the last GOP platform expressed wholehearted belief in unemployment insurance, increased old-age assistance, broader social security generally, slum clearance and public housing, public development of water power, and farm price supports.

These words must have left some of his hearers stunned. Surely, they must have asked themselves, why weren't some of these things mentioned during the multiple appearances of their presidential candidate last year?

But, Dewey, ever the realist in facing a situation, however he may react to it, conceded that the party was split wide open in a fight between two extremes of thought. And then he uttered a remark which must have brought some sly smiles. He said: "What we ought to do . . . is to make it everlastingly clear to the country where we stand and why."

INCOME:

Average $3,000

The average annual income of the American family was climbing.

In 1947 the average was $3,000, highest ever recorded up to that time.

The federal census bureau, which issued the report, found that income was distributed among the country's 37 million families in this manner:

FOUR MILLION had under $1,000; six million had $1,000 to $2,000; eight million, $2,000 to $3,000; eight million, $3,000 to $4,000; four million, $4,000 to $5,000; three million, $5,000 to $6,000; three million $6,000 to $10,000, and one million, $10,000 or more.

Thus only four million families—or slightly fewer than one out of each nine families in the country—had in that year the $6,000 which President Truman has suggested as the starting point for the income tax increase he asked Congress to consider.

An interesting factor is that in one fourth of the families, women earned 25 per cent or more of the family income, and more than two million families were supported entirely by female breadwinners.

Who fared best in the average? Farm wage-workers came out best. The income of this class had jumped from an average of $300 in 1939 to $900 in 1947.

HELP GIVEN NAVAJOS

Government Feeding Snowbound Indians

Operating overland and by air, the federal government was engaged in the business of caring for its snowbound Navajo wards.

Caught almost as helplessly as cattle in the worst blizzard to strike the plains states in years, Indians on the vast Navajo reservation were being fed by a 300-mile lifeline maintained by the government.

With sheep and cattle starving and freezing, with horse transportation impossible, the Navajos were in actual distress.

The government's Indian service doctors reported the health situation was fairly good among the 60,000 Indians living within the reservation area.

Workers toiled with all kinds of mobile equipment to get through to families cut off for six weeks.

GREEN LIGHT:

Waits Faithfully

Harry S. Truman, of Independence, Mo., is getting into a habit of popping up as a poll topper in this or that department.

"Man of the year . . . most popular, etc., etc . . . . " are some of the poll winning titles he already possesses.

Now, he has come up with another.

Mr. Truman is the nation's No. 1 pedestrian.

No less an authority than that National Safety Council has so designated Mr. Truman.

THE ASSOCIATION'S magazine, Public Safety, pictured Mr. Truman on its cover and commended him for his interest in safety.

The traffic advisory board of the District of Columbia hailed the President's "firm decision to wait faithfully for the green light before crossing Pennsylvania avenue."

Mr. Truman turned down a suggestion that a special traffic control be established for his daily walks between his temporary residence at Blair House and the White House.

Mr. Truman said he preferred to obey the traffic signals "like any other citizen."

A-BOMB DATA:

Reds Demand It

The Russians just couldn't stay out of the news.

But in an utterance which commanded American headlines, they revealed themselves as almost childishly naive.

With the cold war as hot as it could be, short of the bullet stage, the Soviets had the gall to demand that the United States tell them how many A-bombs this country has and provide full data on armed forces and armaments.

Never modest in demands, the Soviets set a deadline for receipt of this information. It was March 31, 1949.

HOWEVER, they wouldn't be completely selfish about the matter. They demanded that the report on these matters be made to the United Nations, of which Russia is a member.

Warren R. Austin, U. S. delegate to the U. N., dubbed the Soviet resolution a "succotash of all the beans and different constituents" Russia has put to the U. N. on the arms and atomic questions since the world peace organization was formed.

Even a non-betting citizen might be excused for risking a sawbuck that the Russians would have nothing but their pains in proposing that the U. S. bare its atomic war potentials to the Kremlin.

B-29'S:

Direct Hits

The army air force was making a point for its contention of its importance as an effective arm in itself. Four air force B-29's scored direct hits on nine fighting ships attacking Kodiak island in the navy's north Pacific war games.

An airman aboard one of the bombers said the formation spotted the nine ships 250 miles southeast of Kodiak and registered bombing hits in three runs at 20,000 feet.

THE SHIPS were part of a navy task force attempting to retake the island from a theoretical enemy.

The report was significant from two standpoints. First, because the air force termed it important enough to report. Since that was done, it was motivated, probably, by the fact that the air force wanted to show that it had demonstrated the efficacy of the power of land-based planes in an off-shore attack.

ALLIGATOR:

Nothing Fatal

In Alencon, France, Santos Dumot, circus performer, stuck his head into the mouth of a 300-pound alligator—his regular act. As usual, the audience oohed and aahed.

But this time, the alligator snapped his big jaws shut.

The actor's father rushed to the rescue with an iron bar and forced the jaws open.

The younger Dumot suffered deep head wounds, but will live.

American 'Know-How' Aids In Development of Nations

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON—When the various departments of the government began to gather data for the President to be used as the basis for preliminary legislation for his "bold new program" of establishing the machinery of world cooperation for the development of undeveloped countries, it was a surprise to many to learn that many of these agencies are by no means starting from scratch.

The department of agriculture of course, has had the longest and most successful record in this line— a good 10 years. In 1939 it had become all too evident that in a world where the free flow of trade was threatened by rising anti-democratic hegemonies, we had to look to our nearer neighbors for many things which we did not produce at home, and which they could, but did not, produce themselves.

BAUKHAGE

Congress was quite willing to authorize the department of agriculture to lend some of its technicians to other countries and to help such countries as were willing to cooperate to set up agricultural stations for the purpose of putting American techniques into action.

For those who may have questioned the expenditure in this connection, there is some satisfaction in noting that the experiment paid, from the standpoint of all concerned including the peoples of the countries involved. On the average the United States puts out one dollar for each three dollars spent by the other countries. In 1943 Latin American countries were expending $500,000. In 1948 they invested $1,178,000.

The countries in which the stations are located, an official of the department explained, supplies "land, buildings, associate technicians, office and service personnel, equipment and supplies available within the country, and funds for operating expenses." The United States supplies the "know-how" and the specialized equipment necessary.

The plan pays out, the department explains, this way. Asistance in raising crops such as cocoa, coffee, certain fibres, medical plants, tea and rubber, has increased the revenue from them. They are products in demand in this country, we don't or can't raise. The dollars they earn are turned into many manufactured products which these countries purchase from us.

In the last special report issued by the American military government on the Licensed Press of Germany, we have an example of another type of experience which the United States has had in attempting to provide the "know-how" for a foreign nation.

Some of the seeds which have been planted and which it is hoped will grow, thanks to the application of American techniques, are those which should produce a free and democratic press in Germany.

It would be somewhat rash to try to teach the Germans all about the publishing business. After all Gutenburg, who invented printing, was a German, and ever since his time the Germans have taken the lead in many of the mechanical processes connected with the publishing business. But when the American occupation forces moved in, there was nothing that resembled a free press in Germany, and if there had been it hardly could have flourished under the conditions which then existed. Even today the best we can expect is a "nearly free press" and that is what it admittedly is.

In the United States zone and in Berlin there are now 56 newspapers licensed by the United States. These papers own a cooperatively-operated news agency. These publications are not, and never have been, "pre-censored." They are carefully read by the military government officials, and some have been suspended, after warning. But these occasions have been few.

The mission of the military government in the field of the press, as planned and applied to date, has for its first point:

"To help democratically-minded and trustworthy German publishers and editors to build an objective, free, democratic press in the U. S. Zone in Germany and to prevent the resurgence of Nazism, militarism, racism, pan-Germanism, or nationalism in the newspaper and news agency field."

The special report explains that controls which were imposed when the papers were first established in order to conserve scarce materials, supplies, and equipment and in order to train editors, publishers, and journalists in the tradition of a democratic, free press have been progressively lifted so that for two years at least the U. S. zone has had a "nearly" free press. The eventual goal has been from the start an absolutely free press to the extent that this condition obtains in the United States and Great Britain or other democratic countries.

What have been the results? In the view of the military government:

"Democratically-minded and trustworthy German editors and publishers have established a solid core of independent and democratic newspapers in the U. S. area of occupation. They have been encouraged to maintain their independence and objectivity against all attacks and to resist the encroachment of government or of other special interest groups and protect their right to bring the news of Germany and the world to the people of Germany and to comment upon it."

The question that remains, however, is this: when the controls and the existing regulations are removed, will the Germans graduate from a "nearly free press" which the Americans have encouraged to a genuinely free press which Americans consider an essential of democracy? Will the Germans, who for centuries have accepted control and regimentation from above, be able to start out afresh and make use of the democratic techniques to which we have attempted to expose them?

That is one kind of "know-how" it is hard to pass on.

Haylift Whips Winter Blizzards

The winter storms which attacked the range country and presented what looked for awhile like a major tragedy to the cattle industry didn't turn out to be as bad as some people feared, but it might have been considerably worse if it hadn't been for what happened in the Pacific islands in World War II. The Japs used to say that the American's most terrible weapon was the bulldozer and, of course, the Sea-Bees wrote epic history on a clean slate.

The same might be said of the air force, so far as the snowbound ranchers, especially those in Nevada were concerned. There the haylift took them over the first, worst hump of the storms.

The Great Plains always have furnished hazards unknown to other parts of the North American continent.

As C. Warren Thornwaite, soil conservation expert of the department of agriculture says of the Great Plains: "In a desert, you know what to expect of the climate and plan accordingly. The same is true of humid regions. Men have been badly fooled by the semi-arid regions because they are sometimes humid, sometimes arid, and sometimes a cross between the two. Yet it is possible to make allowances for this, too, once the climate is understood."

One of the worst blows in the winter storms was struck in the southwestern part of the area affected, southern Nevada and northern Arizona, where ordinarily there is all-winter feeding. There are low altitude ranges there which make it unnecessary, under normal conditions, to provide winter feed. When these were cut off there just wasn't any feed available.

The early settlers who struck west were suspicious of the plains. They didn't realize that the gama and the buffalo grass which covered those plains and provided plenty of sustenance for the millions of buffalo which roamed them unmolested, could resist drought as efficiently as it does. For miles there would be no water in sight to the men in the prairie schooners, so they took for granted the land was not liveable and pushed on to the coast. The grass, as long as it was there—and the buffalo were good conservationists and didn't overgraze it—reduced the run-off after rains and prevented erosion.

But the first adventurers had westward-ho written in their hats anyhow, and they headed toward the coast.

Then came the farmers. The cattlemen were driven further west, the plow broke the plains and dug the dust bowl.

But agriculture is a closer-knit industry now and it had many means of assistance besides the army upon which to draw to help combat the recent blizzards—help which the early plainsmen didn't have; the department of agriculture had its organization; the foresters had equipment easily pressed into service.

Look at the Label

A lot of persons, who like to think that they think, are bandying about a couple of terms that mean less than a whole lot to a whole lot of people. I refer to the terms: "liberal" and "reactionary." May I put in my two cents worth in hopes that you may know these modern labels better?

What I mean is that armchair commentators and soapbox spellbinders throw these terms at you, without any apology. Sure, you can get their meaning, whether they are for it or against it, by the way their lips are curled and their epithets hurled. But that's not enough. We need to know what the labels mean. A man can't think straight unless he can know his ideas as he picks them up.

The Real Test

Jesus said of false teachers: "By their fruits ye shall know them." That is still the best way to size up a man and his idea. It is even possible to put that test to labels. That way, a man cannot call himself one thing and be another.

The word liberalism comes from the same basic word that gave us the term liberty. The ancestors of this label, therefore, are of the best blood. The term has the finest possible background, for it implies all sorts of freedoms and puts strong stress upon human liberty. Then how is it that those who claim liberalism as their doctrine are found waving the banner for the very worst enemies of all liberty?.

State Supreme

We Americans declare that we hold sacred the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We have said that man is to be as free as possible, while also being responsible. The nation's founding fathers clearly insisted that government must be set up to serve man, and not man to serve the government.

But here and now we have the sorry mess of the liberals today wanting to change all this. They propose to improve this arrangement by "planning" us into either a socialist or a communist or a fascist society in which all signs of human freedoms must certainly vanish. These planners and plotters would have the society (government or state) to be supreme in all things. Even God they would replace by the State.

A New Serfdom

What need would we then have to guarantee personal rights and freedoms, if the state is to assume all the responsibility for everybody? No need, at all, if the State is supreme. These liberals (I am now applying the label test to their works) care nothing for the Constitution. They are all totalitarians at heart. Their aim is political power to suppress the personal liberty that belongs to the individual. Here we have the strange spectacle of dangerous "liberals."

What else is the explanation, when those who love to call themselves liberals denounce as "reactionary" anybody who distrusts the police state and would halt the trend to totalitarianism? A "reactionary," strictly speaking, is one who objects to progress and desires to turn back the clock. We must conclude then, that the real reactionaries of today are those liberals who would return us to the slavery of the State. They would make the coming century a new Dark Age.

"Efficient Creameries Help Farmers"

—Says ALVIN LEE, Milltown (Wis.) Creamery Operator

"I can run a more efficient plant for our farmers because Land O'Lakes experts keep me posted on the newest and best methods," says Mr. Lee, who operates the Land O'Lakes Creamery at Milltown, Wisconsin.

"As an operator in Land O'Lakes creamery," he says, "I have an incentive to produce better quality butter which brings higher prices on the market."

Creameries and their farmer-owners share alike in the savings of cooperative manufacture, distribution, and sales when they work through Land O'Lakes.

THE CHERRY CLIMAX COMES IN FEBRUARY

CHERRIES are eaten all year round in this country, including February, but the peak of their consumption probably comes in this famous month not only because it is the month of George Washington's birthday and we are reminded of the story of his truthfulness about the cherry tree, but because "red" is a pretty color to put in party foods for St. Valentine's Day and Lincoln's birthday. A National Cherry Week is held annually, from February fifteenth to February twenty-second, this year, at a time when housewives are interested, too, in putting some fruit into the diet to offset the effects of the necessarily heavier winter foods.

A Thrift Opportunity

With the current sales of canned cherries it is a good time for the thrifty housewife to stock up on a variety of them. There are two principal types of canned cherries—sweet and sour. There are both black and white sweet cherries. Sour cherries are red. The most abundant black sweet cherries are the Bing and Windsor, and the most famous white ones are the Royal Annes. Sour cherries are usually either Richmond or Montmorency. Sweet cherries are canned unpitted. Sour cherries are always canned with the pits removed.

This is a good season, too, to check up on your cherry recipes, and make sure they include some of the best ways of serving these fruits. The sweet cherries are delicious and decorative for use in salads, and the sour are grand for making cherry puddings and also for serving with meats when their tart flavor is needed.

Here are two new cherry recipes which you will be glad to add to your repertoire:

Baked Cherry Pudding: Cream together four tablespoons butter and one cup sugar, add three-fourths cup of milk alternately with the following sifted dry ingredients: one and one-half cups flour, two teaspoons of baking powder and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Pour into a buttered baking dish. Meanwhile boil together for five minutes the contents of one No. 2 can of pitted red cherries, one-half cup sugar and two teaspoons grated orange rind. Pour this on top of the batter, and bake for about thirty minutes in a medium oven—350 degrees. The dough will rise to the top, the cherries and syrup sink to the bottom forming a sort of sauce. Turn out upside down and serve warm with plenty of cream. This serves eight persons.

Cherry Queen of Puddings: Pour two cups of hot milk over one cup of dry bread crumbs which are fairly fine. Add one-half cup of sugar and two tablespoons butter. Let soak for five minutes. Then add the lightly-beaten yolks of three eggs, and pour into a buttered pudding dish. Bake in a slow oven—275 to 300 degrees—for from forty to fifty minutes, or until a knife, inserted, comes out clean. Meanwhile cook the contents of one No. 2 can of pitted red cherries with three-fourths cup of sugar until the syrup is thick, then cool slightly. When the pudding is done, spread this cherry mixture on top, cover with a meringue made of three egg whites and six tablespoons of sugar. Return to the oven for about fifteen minutes or until the meringue is firm and a delicate brown. Serve cold. This serves eight persons.*

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

How's Your Listening Time?

Buck Howell and I were in Baleville last week. Dropped in at Bob's diner where some friends were sitting around talking about whether to sell hogs now or wait.

Buck plunges right into the discussion. He's lecturing away when suddenly they all stand up and start stomping their feet like it was an Indian war dance.

I'm flabbergasted. But Buck only looked sheepish and explains, "Guess I was talking again, when I should-of been listening. When a person's talking time gets out of line with his listening time around here, the gang reminds him by standing up and stomping."

From where I sit, that's a good system. Everyone has a right to his opinions—but others have a right to theirs, too—whether it's deciding between to sell or not to sell, apple pie or cherry pie, or a glass of mellow beer or cider. Life's more interesting that way, and hang it if you don't sometimes learn something!

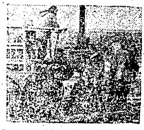
Otter Tales
By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Boy, am I tired! Every time I get zipping along in good shape — WHAM! — a big storm knocks the juice right out of me. Believe me, it's tough trying to travel over those high-tension lines when snow and sleet break the poles off! Had quite a time down near Kerkhoven (Minn.) right after New Years, but the Otter Tail crews worked like mad to keep me on the job.



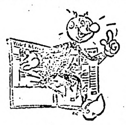
They reset 67 poles in less than 48 hours, with the help of an earth-boring machine for digging holes. Just think! In three minutes this power-driven auger digs a hole 5½ feet deep, 20 inches in diameter, and right through 3 feet of frost! That's quicker'n I can heat a hot-plate and fry an egg.

Speaking of holes and poles, take a look at the way poles were hauled back in 1916. This picture was taken near Browns Valley; at the wheel of the old Avery truck is Vic Burton, who now works at Otter Tail's Kidder Station in Wahpeton. And, believe it or not, those aren't rubber tires — they're iron-studded wheels.

Yes, lots of things have changed. In the old days the Otter Tail folks used water power. Now they use mostly coal — so I cover more territory quicker and work cheaper. In fact, in 1948 the Otter Tail Power Company used 13,500 cars of coal and 240 cars of fuel oil — which, if put end to end, would reach from Fergus Falls to Grand Forks.

About 95% of this coal was good ol' North Dakota lignite—and even though Otter Tail owns 61 of its own coal cars, the freight bill was a million dollars. Diggin' and shippin' all that coal sure creates jobs for a lot of people.

One of the many important jobs I do is running presses and heating lead in linotype machines for newspaper folks — who are among the most sincere, hardest-working and least appreciated people I know. Sometimes when you feel nobody's got troubles but you, think of a day in the life of a small-town editor.



He solicits ads, sells subscriptions, digs up news, writes stories, reads proof, clips exchanges, keeps books, dusts and sweeps, answers his mail, sets type, fixes the press, cuts paper, writes editorials . . . then when he's good and tuckered out, he has to print the paper!

He runs one of the most important institutions in any town, and represents the backbone of democracy. Nobody ever thanks him for doing a GOOD job — but if he prints one little mistake in his paper, the criticism he gets would melt all the insulators off a 7200 volt high-line!

Life without your local newspaper would be about as dull as life without your old electrical pal,

WEEKLY NEW ALYSIS

Congress Gets Cont Proposals Which Would Curb Wa es, Prices; Doctors Offer Public Health Plan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

CONTROLS:

Needed or Not?

The administration at Washington has made its move for price and wage controls.

It has asked congress to place ceilings on prices which threaten to go above last December's level. It also has proposed creation of a six-man board to regulate wage increases.

Already, however, it was becoming increasingly clear to the people that constantly shifting factors are changing so swiftly that some of the major points in the administration's legislative program may become obsolete before they are called for consideration.

FOR INSTANCE, the downward trend in prices would indicate that a proposal for price control, except in some few isolated cases, might even appear ridiculous. Consequently, continuing decline in prices would naturally knock out any validity of wage hike demands.

The sincerity of the administration in this respect might be open to question, but not seriously so. Practical politicians and people who realize the need for application of politics in government procedures will understand that whether the government actually wants what it asks is somewhat beside the point.

The real point is that these measures were pledged by President Truman in his campaign, and it was as early as inauguration day that administration leaders stated publicly they meant to implement campaign pledges in every way. Now the administration is going through the motions of seeking to have adopted all the legislation the President promised the voters when he was a candidate for the office.

A QUICK RUN-DOWN of the administration's legislative-potential will show that civil rights, tax increases, outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and socialized medicine, all admittedly needing some treatment, are in for a rough time in congress.

That being the case, it is difficult to understand how Mr. Truman and his advisers could make price and wage controls stick should there be no apparent need for either.

PUBLIC HEALTH:

Physicians' Plan

There would be discussion of motive, of course, but whether actuated by the belief that socialized medicine was an undesirable alternative, or by a sincere desire to widen their field of service, America's physicians had come up with a plan.

OBVIOUSLY, the plan was a counter move in the developing battle over socialized medicine, and in it one could see some concession to the bureaucratic ambitions which, it is claimed, motivates the socialized medicine effort.

First, the doctors through their American Medical association's board of trustees, urge creation of a federal department of health, with cabinet status, which would be authorized to promote the general welfare by aiding and fostering programs in the field of health. This department also would contribute to individual, family and community well-being.

Briefly, the program would include:

PROMPT DEVELOPMENT of diagnostic facilities; health centers and local public health units; health centers and hospital services; comprehensive health education programs; integration of veterans' medical care and hospitalization with other medical care and hospital programs; greater emphasis on the program of industrial medicine, and adequate support, with funds free from political control, of the medical, dental and nursing schools and other institutions necessary for the training of specialized personnel required in the provision and distribution of medical care.

In its scope the doctors' program read like Mr. Truman's "bold new program" for betterment of world living. But its very generalities and extent might be the factors to doom it.

With immediate medical care the greatest need of too many Americans unable to pay for it, the panacea would have to be immediate and visual. Examined, even close up, the doctor's plan appeared to offer little toward the solution of the issue of socialized medicine.

MERCI TRAIN:

And Kisses

Although no finished hand at the game, Kentucky's Gov. Earle Clements was not to be outdone in the amenities incident to arrival of the French Merci train in Frankfort.

BUSSED heartily on the cheek by French representative Andre Picard, Governor Clements bussed right back, displayed no chagrin.

And, in addition to the buss, Picard received a commission as a Kentucky colonel.

Absolved

William W. Remington, who was an official of the commerce department, was absolved of disloyalty charges following an alleged link to Soviet interests. He was given a new job with the department, but with salary remaining at $10,000 annually.

DEFENSE PACT:

Gilded Lily

There were puzzling things going on in Washington as the proposed north Atlantic security pact came up for discussion.

As any schoolboy knows, only congress can declare war. Yet Senator Vandenberg of the foreign affairs committee was quoted as saying that if any pact were drawn he expected such a pact to "reserve to congress the complete right of decision" on what to do about an armed attack.

THAT STATEMENT of Vandenberg's amounted to nothing more than a thick coat of gilt on the lily. The pact could do no less than "reserve" such decision, because the constitution of the United States is quite clear as to what governmental body in the United States has the authority to declare war. The constitution does not relegate that power to a senate committee or to the state department.

The point is made only to highlight the trend of official thinking in federal circles. Despite the constitutional provision, Senator Vandenberg and apparently those who draft the pact, are "willing" to let congress make any decision on going to war.

There were other puzzling factors connected with the pact. Both Senator Vandenberg and Senator Connally declared that signing the pact would not commit this nation to war in the event another pact signatory were attacked.

IF THAT were the situation, the critical queried, what would be the use of the pact?

The senators had an answer for that one—an answer reminiscent of American thinking before Pearl Harbor. They pointed out that, as Vandenberg put it, "in my opinion the mere formal recognition of this community of interest in the event of an armed attack on the Atlantic community—without another word in the treaty—would be an infinite assurance against World War III."

What the senator was intimating in effect was that with the United States a signatory to the pact, any nation would be afraid to jump either on the U.S. or another member.

THE SENATOR'S MEMORY seemed to be waning. Japan wasn't "afraid" to attack Pearl Harbor. That was World War II. Germany wasn't "afraid" to sink the Lusitania. That was World War I. The "fear" bulwark hadn't done so well on two occasions.

Did Senator Vandenberg have some special information, or intuition, that it would work better to prevent World War III?

LONGEVITY:

The Hard Way

So you'd like to live to be 102?

There's a way—but it will appeal only to the rugged.

A Westerfield, N. J., woman has passed the century mark with vitality still good, interest in things about her still unimpaired.

OF HER 102nd birthday party she said:

"It was a most wonderful party. I felt just like I was walking on air. The house looked like a greenery. All those flowers and even an orchid. It was wonderful."

About reaching 102 . . . well, the lady who did it, Mrs. Katherine G. Lyon, said she was in favor of exercise and fresh air.

"It's all a matter of chewing your food properly, and getting plenty of fresh air. Anyone who is 102 years old and can't walk at least two miles ought to go to a doctor and find out what's the matter with them . . . I'm always ready to go."

Mrs. Lyon did not stipulate that walking two miles a day was the entire answer.

TRENDS:

Dictatorial

The gentleman who was talking knew whereof he spoke. When he began to express himself on dictatorships, the public might listen respectfully for he had but lately concluded an assignment to put down one of the most vicious dictatorships the world had ever seen.

But he wasn't talking of foreign dictatorships. Instead, he was warning the Columbia college forum on democracy that dictatorship was an actual possibility right here in the United States.

THE SPEAKER was Gen. Dwight D. "Ike" Eisenhower, who was supreme commander of allied forces in the war against the dictatorships—World War II.

Discussing the supposition that this nation was in danger of falling into the hands of a dictatorship without a shot being fired, Eisenhower said he was not talking about the usual type of seizure of power by force.

He was talking, he said, about a gradual dictatorship of bureaucracy which could result from the "constant drift toward centralized government."

"There is a kind of dictatorship," he said, "that can come about through a creeping paralysis of thought and readiness to accept paternalistic measures from the government, along with a surrender of our own responsibilities and, therefore, of our control over our own lives and our right to exercise our vote.

"IF WE ALLOW this drift toward centralized bureaucratic government to continue, finally it will be expressed . . . in the actual field of operation.

"There'll be a swarming of bureaucrats over the land, ownership of property will gradually drift into that central government, and finally you have to have dictatorship as the only means of operating such a huge organization."

When a man of General Ike's stature is publicly concerned over the probability of a dictatorship in the U. S., benign or otherwise, it seems it were time the public, too, should begin to look into the situation.

MYSTERY:

Biggest Run

As one southern reporter described it, it was the "biggest run in the South's history."

One moment everything was all right. The next, disaster had struck.

It happened in Jacksonville, Fla., and there was no warning of its coming. Women and girls arose in the morning, donned attractive, sheer nylon stockings and started about their business.

Then, the nylons simply started coming apart. Working girls went bare-legged to lunch, carrying their stockings—or what was left of them—in their purses.

A horrible possibility failed to materialize—the girls were spared disintegration of their nylon underwear; but there were many anxious moments as they watched the nylon stockings disintegrate on their legs.

The health department advanced a theory that incompletely-burned particles of soot carried a gas which caused the stockings to come apart.

At Wilmington, Del., a technical engineer for a nylon manufacturer said it's happened before in Washington, Chicago, Nashville and Minneapolis.

He explained that the trouble was acid-bearing soot. These tiny particles, he said, even from ordinary coal fires, contain sulphur dioxide, sulphur trioxide and other acids. When they land on a coat or hat, the concentrate may destroy a thread, but you don't notice it.

But when they land on a stocking thread—zip! And there's a story to make the nation's headlines.

Accused

Agnes Smedley, 54-year-old Oklahoma-born author, has been named by Gen. Douglas MacArthur as a Soviet agent in his recent report on a Russian spy ring. She denied the accusation.

METALS:

Stronger

For those who use metals, there was good news. Dr. J. H. Holloman, General Electric research laboratory scientist, reported that metals eventually can be made from five to 10 times stronger.

Metals are made up of tiny grains. A break always begins at a high temperature with microscopic cracks along the boundaries. It is prevention of these cracks that will strengthen the metal.

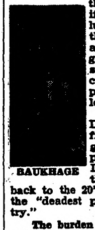
GOP Tries to Face Facts: Changes Are Sure to Come

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON—I don't want to get into semantics but I have to say something about the word "conservative", purely as a word, if I am going to discuss some of the undersurface terms in Washington recently.

If it is fair to define a conservative as a person who has something to conserve, and I think the American people are naturally conservative in that sense, when you take away that something, Americans will join the radicals or anybody else to win back what was taken away.

The majority of the people don't want a free lunch. They just want a chance to earn enough to pay for their own lunch. But if they can't get lunch any other way, they'll take it how and where they can get it. That is a lesson which certain conservatives (in the political sense) are learning slowly.



BAUKHAGE

Last month Tom Dewey returned from his political grave to say at a Republican Lincoln Day dinner that if the GOP tried to go back to the 20's, it would become the "deadest pigeon in the country."

The burden of his theme was that the party was split wide apart and it had better get together, slough off one extreme element which wants to "turn the clock back" and the other extremists who want to "out-promise the Democrats." He demanded that the party stand for "social progress under a flourishing system of private enterprise where every human right is expanded." Those opposed to "liberal and progressive policies" should get out of the party.

Here again we run into semantics—what is "progressive," what is "liberal"—for that matter, what is Sylvia? To one an owl, to another a nightingale. To the pinks, a "liberal" is a reactionary. To the conservative a "liberal" is a red.

Dewey said that the Republican party (or the party as he sees it) believes in "unemployment insurance, old age assistance on an increased basis, in broader social security generally, in slum clearance, in public development of our water resources, in farm price supports, in vigorous protection of the rights of labor."

And he seems to recognize that all of us, Republicans included, will have to take certain things for granted. Certain social and political changes which we may not like any more than our grandfathers liked a lot of "new-fangled" ideas they met with, like the safety razor, say.

The federal reserve board, the income tax, women's suffrage—all were once considered little less than the instruments of the devil himself by a lot of people who never think twice about them now. What policy the federal reserve board follows is debatable by either political party, but nobody would be fool enough to try to eliminate the board as an institution. Both parties claim they invented it.

The size of the income tax, and how it's distributed is also a matter to be settled by the party in power, but I can't quite see anybody trying to eliminate income taxes entirely. Other matters like the principles of government regulation of interstate commerce, of old age and unemployment insurance and dozens of other activities seem to be here for good.

If I am a Red for saying that, you can measure me for a suit of long underwear to match, tuck me into the one-hoss-shay and send me home.

As a matter of fact I am really pretty much of a moss-back. Although I'd trade in my used airplane for a rocket, if anybody has a surrey with the fringe on top and I had a place to park it, that's what I'd really prefer.

Mention of Taft Evokes Criticism

One can't discuss the Republican party without mentioning Mr. Taft. And whenever I say anything good on the air about Sen. Robert A. Taft, I get letters like the following from a man in Lakewood, New York (I had in the same broadcast described a truck-driver who nearly ran over me):

"I can see a picture of you," he writes, "looking down your long nose at that truck driver and believe me, I know just exactly how you felt towards him. However, I wonder which is the most dangerous, an idiot with a truck or an idiot with a vast radio audience.

"You see I look down my long nose at you just as you did the truck driver and I have the advantage of having heard a few thousand of your broadcasts. Through this medium I have explored your brain and believe me I find not much there. Your speaking of the truck driver as well as Taft's intelligence is a fair measure of your own. . . ."

This was my answer:

"Dear Sir: I have your letter saying that you wonder which is the most dangerous, the truck driver I referred to or an idiot with a vast radio audience—and also that you have heard me a few thousand times. I am glad to note we have so much in common."

My reference to Taft which so infuriated the letter-writer was in connection with an implication that Senator Taft IS the Republican party in the Senate as it exists today. This situation may change, though there are no present indications it will. Taft rides the elephant, regardless of who happens to play the calliope.

And paradoxically enough, it will be Senator Taft, the strongest figure in the senate, arch-Republican, symbol of reaction to his enemies, who probably will be a powerful factor in the enactment of more than one of the so called "social-service" laws which are a vital part of the administration program. Housing and federal aid to education are two measures which might be named. And although the Taft-Hartley act will have a new name, the imprint of its senatorial sponsor will not be entirely eradicated from its structure when it comes out of the hopper.

Taft was able to drag out the labor bill hearings for two weeks longer than was originally planned, and I would not be surprised if these lines appear in print before his gently-led filibuster against the repeal is over, or at least long over. But that does not mean Taft or his party controls the senate.

As this was written a theory was abroad that the Republican strategy had developed to the point where, if the party would keep its "young Turks" in line—the so-called liberal Republican senators who tried and so dismally failed to curb Taft's power—they could count on enough votes of the southern senators on most controversial issues (unless these issues step on the toes of southern tradition) to wrest control from the Democrats.

In fact, the expounders of this theory were only a little while ago pointing to defeat of the bill to exempt the tax on the inauguration as proof that the fate of the Democrats in the senate was a pretty dark one. They explained it was symptomatic when 41 Republicans voted against the measure, and found to their surprise and pleasure that they were able to get six Democrats to join them, thus providing a majority and defeating the measure.

That made things look very simple. But there is another side to that story. That vote backfired and hurt the Republicans more than it helped. It did more than a little to create Democratic solidarity, and the really deep-dishers on Capitol Hill are predicting that the Democrats are going to achieve enough unanimity from now on to maintain their majority on major issues. There will be, of course, matters where members of both parties will desert because the issue involved is such that the particular state or area from which the senator comes has an interest which conflicts with the majority of his party.

There will be some issues in which Democrats will join Republicans as well as vice versa. And, as I said earlier, there are some things that don't appear on the surface.

The burden of the attack against the Democrats, whether you call them New Dealers, Fair Dealers, or Trumanites, is that they seek government control of business.

Now I believe most Republican leaders have the brains to admit (and if they haven't they can expect to be defeated, just as the liberals and conservatives were beaten in England) that the best way to kill government control—the antithesis of free enterprise because it is government monopoly—is to kill private monopoly. The latter is a two-edged sword against free enterprise. First, private monopoly kills competition. Second, it opens the way to government ownership.

Today the intelligent leaders of the GOP have to admit what I am sure they believe at heart, namely, that they will have to let the federal government do certain things for the people, if private enterprise can't or won't do those things. Taft, as well as the young Turks, knows that. They also know that private monopoly breeds state control.

Cleanliness Advised By Veterinarians

Cattle brucellosis or Bangs disease will never be conquered while animals are housed in uncleaned buildings and farm yards. Ranchers have been successful in avoiding spread of the disease by maintaining separate calving pastures and rotating all pastures. Much of the dissatisfaction with brucellosis control can be avoided by better management and identification of vaccinated animals.

Calf losses usually can be stopped by veterinarians, but where owners cannot maintain holding pens and yards that are clean and sanitary, their prescribed vaccines and treatments may be of little value; the sooner young calves can be put to pasture on fresh grass, the better.

America's Greatest Resource

When you enter the gates of our huge factories and industrial plants, do you see what is really there? Whenever I go inside factory gates, the wonder of it all amazes me. Where did all the equipment come from? By what magic was all of it assembled into such a gigantic unit for production? Somebody had to pay for all of it. Do you suppose it was a capitalist?

Nobody's Orders

Yes, capitalists did the deed. It is interesting that they keep doing that type of thing, all along. They keep building steel mills and putting up new oil refineries. New assembly lines are continually set up, and old ones improved. Plant expansions are undertaken. Modern tools are installed to replace worn ones. And one of the most amazing things about it is that nobody has to tell them to do it!

No dictator commands that all this money be spent. No government bureau has to send out a directive. It's all just part of the system that is the mainspring of America. This system of free and individual enterprise has made possible the building of our nation. Whenever the incentive of profit or reward is there, both men and money will be put to work. Capital comes to the job in hope of a reward, just as a man expects a paycheck as the result of his labor. Money and men work side by side, then.

Profits Make Jobs

These things are so common under the enterprise system as we know it in America, that most of us take them for granted. Yet, these capitalists (sometimes attacked so bitterly by unthinking persons) constantly supply the essential ingredient that makes jobs and produces goods.

Actually, the six or seven cents profit out of each sales dollar, which is typical of industry as a whole, does a tremendous job for you and for me. It pays for all the machines that, in turn, do most of the work. This makes it possible for 60 cents or more of this same sales dollar to be given to those who supply the human energy, the workmen. Some three cents, or only about half of this small profit, is used on the average to pay investors for the use of capital that brought these industries into being.

Incentives for Each

The other three cents or so of the profit goes back into the business. This portion of profit is used to pay for worn-out equipment and other replacements, and to keep up with rising costs and increased taxes. Today, that part of the sales dollar called profit is hardly ever enough to meet industry's real and urgent needs. In late years our industry has had to borrow more and more to meet rising inventory and equipment costs.

The nation's industrial enterprises cannot exist now, and never could have been developed, without the use of capital. Capital very effectively teams up with labor and management to bring great benefits to every citizen. Each of the partners —investor, worker, manager—has his own incentive. This system, free and unhampered, brings forth the best effort from each. This enterprise system is our country's greatest resource.

"This Butter Earns for Farmers All the Way to Market..."

says Dairy Farmer PETE ESSLER, patron-owner of Farmers Union Creamery of Kenmore, (N. D.)

"Through our membership in Land O'Lakes, we actually own our own marketing organization," says Mr. Essler, who milks 16 cows on a 720 acre farm a few miles from the creamery he helped organize. "We share in the savings on our products all the way to the market," he says.

"And our treatment is fair and square all the way down the line. That's why my long association with Land O'Lakes has been both pleasant and profitable."

Lonely Isles

The remote British islands of Tristan da Cunha, in the far South Atlantic, are known as the "lonely isles." World War I was nearly over before news of its outbreak reached inhabitants of these islands. Years passed before the islanders heard of the armistice. By contrast, it was through World War II that Tristan da Cunha began losing its isolation In 1942, a secret meteorlogical and radio station was set up there by the British royal navy and the South African air force.

Beginning of Central Park

In 1840, acting on a suggestion by newspaper editor William Cullen Bryant, New York City bought the 840 acres comprising Central Park for $7,389,700. That area is now valued, on the basis of adjoining real estate, at $690,900 an acre, or more than $520,000,000, almost a 750 per cent increase. After the squatters, moonshiners and counterfeiters were run out of the area, 3,000 men worked almost 11 years to give the park its present topography.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Big Business Flayed in T-H Row; Unemployment Increases in U. S.; Soviets to Keep Prepared for War

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

LABOR LAW:

'Trouble, Trouble'

In the field of liberal—or, as some would term it, even "left wing"—Republicanism, the GOP's Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon was conceding nothing to no man.

THE SENATOR was vocally and vociferously hurt. The defense of the Taft-Hartley law by "big business" was giving the senator no rest and he meant to let everyone know about it.

With little originality but much vigor, the senator was crying that the attitude of many defenders of the Taft-Hartley law was a "Judas betrayal of the capitalistic system."

IN A SUDDEN onslaught against many of the business men who have appeared before the committee in defense of the measure, the senator declared their attitude is "shocking . . . selfish . . . class-conscious . . . un-Christian."

In contrast, he praised Senator Taft (R., Ohio) whose name the law bears, for his "fair-minded objectivity" in considering testimony on the "shortcomings" of the act.

Morse declared he and Taft are "much nearer together on the need for a law less drastic against labor" than they were in 1947 when the act was passed.

MEANWHILE, sentiment was growing among congressional observers that with every day of delay on legislative consideration of Taft-Hartley law repeal, there increased the probability of labor's failing to get as many of the law provisions outlawed as they might hope to do.

A major battle was shaping up on the proposal, with many legislators evidencing a dawning conviction that perhaps it would not be wise to scrap the Taft-Hartley law in its entirety and replace it with some version of the Wagner act.

JOBLESS:

3 Million Out

At present count the number of jobless in the United States stood at three million.

However, according to the experts, there was no cause for immediate concern. Commissioner Ewan Clague of the federal bureau of labor said the time to become alarmed would be when the unemployed total reached five million and stayed there.

Would it reach five million?

THAT WAS A POINT on which the experts disagreed.

Those who were loudest in pointing to the possibility of a depression pointed out that in just three months the jobless total had jumped from 1.8 million to the present three million. That was a rate of acceleration which, they claimed should cause everyone to be alarmed.

Time was an element, Commissioner Clague contended. Wait, he said, until the spring weather begins to revive the construction business and Easter trade and then "we'll be able to tell better just where we're going."

The federal official noted there was a drop of 1.75 million workers in non-agricultural jobs between mid-December and mid-January. Part of this was seasonal, he said, but the overall decline was greater than normal.

SIGNIFICANT was a report of Robert G. Goodwin, director of the bureau of employment security, who said that the number of people receiving jobless benefits increased by 62,000 to a total of 1,784,000 during the week ending February 12. In the same week in 1948, there were 1,030,000 such claims.

Employment or its lack has always been a major factor of indication in an evaluation of the nation's economic condition because of the simple fact that in past recessions general unemployment has always preceded periods of national depression.

Fraternity Man Chooses Mind Over Gastronomics

Culture had won a minor triumph.

At Ann Arbor, Mich., Paul H. Smith, University of Michigan junior was about to have at it with a hog for eating capacity honors.

Thinking better of the idea, he changed his mind.

Reason, it appears, had raised its awesome head.

Smith declared that, on second thought, it occurred to him that the contest might be a "reflection" on himself and his fraternity.

Fraternity men from high above Cayuga's waters to the Rose Bowl breathed easier, buckled anew to their academic tasks.

RUSSIANS:

Big War Talk

The Russians must keep prepared for war.

That was the message of Soviet Marshal Nikolai A. Bulganin, Soviet minister of armed forces, in a statement in an order of the day marking the 31st anniversary of the Red army.

The Marshal named the possible enemy—the United States.

Bulganin added that the "ruling circles of the United States which seek to establish their world domination by force pursue a policy of aggression and of unleashing a new war."

The language was strong, even for the Russians. Was it the beginning of a campaign by the Soviets to prepare the mass Russian mind for conflict?

It could be. Bulganin played on fears and prejudices which might well lay the groundwork for calling the Soviet people into war. Intimating the possibility of attack, he assured the Russians that the "Soviet people may rest assured our army, air force and navy will vigilantly stand guard over their socialist homeland."

THE UNITED STATES was the only western power singled out by the marshal in his order of the day.

But there was a naive element of braggadocio in all the anniversary statements. It seemed Lt. Gen. S. S. Shatilov, deputy chief director of the political board of the armed services, was trying to "whistle past the graveyard" when he stated that in its early days the Soviet army had "routed the hordes of 14 powers."

GETTING HOT IN FLORIDA

Governor Warren Runs 'Bookies' Underground

All was not sunshine and soft breezes in Florida. It was hot enough but at this writing there had been nothing to call off the heat imposed by Gov. Fuller Warren's edict against bookies. "Bookies" to the initiate are those who take race horse bets off the tracks, usually in rear rooms of public establishments—in more sumptuous instances in their own establishments.

It appeared the governor's crackdown was going to stick. The bookies "went underground" and it was reported that a telegraphic news service supplying results of horse races had suspended.

Most reports emanating from the state were to the effect that bookies were out of work except for a few trying to do a small business by runners and telephones. The outlook didn't appear too rosy.

White Coal

White coal is the figurative name for falling water that is capable of being used for power purposes. The term originated in France; it is the literal translation of houille blanche and was probably suggested because much of the falling water in France originated in snow-covered mountains, or because falling water when filled with air bubbles appears white when compared with the blackness of coal.

Tide water, usable for power, is sometimes called "blue coal."

Washington Digest

North, South Fought Hard Over President Buchanan

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Democratic harmony, so far as the Dixiecrat revolt is concerned, remains an uncertain quantity. Democrats, basically, are still Democrats, but there will always be certain fundamental differences between North and South which existed even before slavery and secession became issues.

Beyond that, however, recent clashes with the Dixiecrats are largely only a levelling off process and probably nothing a sensible compromise cannot cure.

BAUKHAGE

People outside of Washington are often surprised that differences still arise between North and South over ancient matters which most of the country has forgotten. The country has also forgotten that it was here that the earliest outbreaks of sectional feeling took place. As early as 1848, there was a riot following an "underground" slave-running incident in which 76 household servants were spirited off to freedom. The Abolitionist Weekly was stormed and the capital suffered the biggest attack of jitters it had had since the British burned the White House 34 years before.

Nine years later a band of armed ruffians from Baltimore entered the city bent on helping the "Know Nothing" candidates in the local election. (We had local elections then.) The marines had to be called out: six men were killed and twice as many wounded.

The tide continued to rise and no President, from Tyler to Buchanan, could or would do anything about it. It was an open secret that Buchanan's sympathies were largely south of the Mason-Dixon line. Historians agree that he learned in advance the decision in the famous Dred Scott slavery case which was one of the last of the explosions which started the Civil War. Today supreme court secrets are kept secret. But Buchanan knew the court had ruled that Dred Scott was not a citizen under the meaning of the Constitution, and could not be made a citizen; further that the Constitution affirmed a property right in slaves, and such slave property was protected by the "due process of law" clause.

Buchanan realized what the effect of this decision would be, but in his inauguration speech piously advised the country to accept the verdict, no matter what it was.

Later when southern sentiment grew in the capital, Buchanan did try to organize a militia, but congress would have none of it. The regular army troops in the city were known to be of doubtful loyalty. The militia, much larger on paper, could muster only 150 men. Meanwhile the southern group, the Militant Jackson Democratic association, was drilling 800 men.

Finally the militia managed to get a thousand men under arms. But feeling ran high, and on Washington's birthday following the election of Abraham Lincoln by the electoral college but before his inauguration, the militia paraded. Ex-President Tyler, a Virginian, went to Buchanan and protested the fact that they had been allowed to display the Stars and Stripes, and Buchanan is said to have apologized.

Most people have forgotten the northern animosity toward Buchanan, but it was to crop up again in my time when it was the subject of one of those asidulous debates for which Sen. Cabot Lodge was notorious. Many Presidents are memorialized in stone in Washington, but not all, and in Lodge's time, Buchanan was one who was not.

Buchanan had been a bachelor and had taken his niece with him to the White House as hostess to assist in the brilliant entertainments for which he was noted. She later became Mrs. Harriett Lane Johnston, lived to an affluent old age and when she died, left the sum of $50,000 (which bought a lot more marble and bronze then than it would now) for the erection of a statue of her uncle.

The donation of a site required the approval of congress. This donation was cheap, considering that, unlike similar tributes to the nation's hero, all expenses were provided, Congress was willing enough, but not that stalwart yankee, Lodge, who lived perhaps nearer to the age of Buchanan to his own generation.

He chose to dig up all the unsavory memories his scholarly brain could muster to block the donation of the site. Naturally hot southern blood grew hotter, and what some of Mr. Lodge's opponents lacked in data, they more than made up in oratory. The motion was passed, but not until tempers had been thoroughly ruffled.

The site chosen for the statue was not conspicuous. In fact, I had never seen it until it was brought to my attention by a gentleman fully conversant with the details of the dispute and likewise familiar with every nook and cranny of the capital city. I asked him to show me the statue. He said he knew where it was. In Meridian Park. But just before we arrived at the scene, he paused and said: "It ought to be here."

It developed that he had never seen it either.

It was there—in an inconspicuous spot, a huge bronze statue, of good workmanship, backed by a wide exedra which is defined as "a seat with a high back"—but this would seat several squads of infantry.

It is a huge piece of stonework flanked by two symbolic figures in classic style, one representing diplomacy, in which Buchanan was skilled (he had served well as minister to Great Britain) and one representing the law in which, if we may judge by his breach of ethics in connection with the supreme court decision, he was not of equal stature. Perhaps his niece was sensitive on this point for she specified the inscription—the only words on the statue beside the dates of his term and the single word "Buchanan"—It reads:—

"The incomparable statesman whose walk was upon the mountain ranges of the law." (Although it isn't indicated, it was Buchanan's own attorney-general who said that.

There is a certain ironic touch in the fact that Buchanan's memory had to be perpetuated in stone by family subsidy, for from 1820 to 1830 he was one of the few members of congress who pursued the futile attempt to get congress to approve a suitable memorial in the capitol to George Washington.

Efforts in this direction either were circumvented or ignored until 1831, the centenary of Washington's birth. At that time, the public was so aroused over the indifference of congress that George Watterson, then librarian of congress, formed an association which raised the money for the Washington monument which was—eventually—completed on the spot originally chosen for a statute of Washington by Major L'Enfant who drew the plans for the city.

Climate of Jericho

Lying 800 feet and more below Mediterranean level, the garden acres of Jericho extend toward the Dead sea, lowest surface level on earth. In summer Jericho is torrid, and waves of heat make the desolate white marl hills seem to dance a witch's waltz. In winter, when Jerusalem lies frozen under a blanket of snow, Jericho, near by and far below, is a sunshine paradise.

Railroad Scrap

Railroads turned back to the iron and steel industry more than a ton of scrap metal for every two tons of iron and steel they bought during the past four years. This amount of scrap, an essential material in steel production, is enough to produce all the steel furnished to the railroads.

Safety in Driving

One of the simplest ways to prevent automobile accidents is to drive a car that's kept in safe operating condition. Equipment items suggested as having special relation to safety are: headlights, tail and stop lights, brakes, tires, windshield wipers, steering and wheel alignment, the muffler and exhaust system, the windshield and other glass, the rear-view mirror, and horn.

Totonacs, an ancient Indian nation of Mexico, left important contributions of the quaint lore of that country before their high degree of civilization passed into oblivion. Their pyramids and temples have almost disappeared under the Mexican jungle, but their death-defying dance, the Palo Volador, still thrills writers and explorers who visit these modern heirs of a great civilization.

Fed. Crop Ins' Date Extended

The Board of Directors of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation has amended the Regulations by Extending the closing date for filing 1949 applications for spring wheat and flax from March 15 to April 9, 1949. This extension was approved so that every farmer in the crop insurance counties may have an opportunity to understand and participate in the Federal Crop Insurance Program. This would not have been possible without the extension because of the abnormal weather conditions which have prevailed in several counties throughout the state for the past several months.

This additional period must be utilized to fullest extent by carrying out an organized and vigorous sales program. The responsibility rests with the county committee and agents to see that every eligible farmer is contacted and receives an explanation of the best crop insurance program ever offered. The farmer should then decide for himself whether, or not he wants insurance. If he is given all the facts we feel sure the odds are that he will want insurance.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Truman Threatens to Take Battle On Legislative Program to People; MacArthur Sees No Russian Attack

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

TRUMAN:
All Aboard!

President Truman, who obviously regards himself as the "man with a mandate," was tossing some not too subtle threats toward congressmen inhospitable to his legislative proposals.

Keep fooling with me, he said, in effect, and I'll hit the old stump again—and you know what that means.

The President meant that if congress didn't set about soon enacting into law the pledges he made to the people during the November campaign, he'd hit the trail again and take the issue to the people—the way Franklin D. Roosevelt used to do.

MR. TRUMAN apparently felt that by so doing he could whip public sentiment up to such a pitch that congress would be forced to go along with his program, or else face possible defeat in the 1950 elections.

Not having the vocal equipment of his predecessor, who could get desired results with his "fireside chats," Mr. Truman would have to climb aboard a train if he wanted to influence the masses.

Strangely enough, congress didn't seem unduly perturbed at the President's threat. Things went along in congressional procedure about as usual, with Republicans charging that the 81st congress is also a "do nothing" congress, while Democratic members were inviting comparison with the "do nothing" 80th congress.

IT WAS READILY evident that Mr. Truman was needled by lack of congressional action on his program. Reiterating his campaign pledges of last fall, in which he declared the central issue was the "welfare of all the people," Mr. Truman asserted that lobbyists, pressure groups, and controlled editorial pages, columnists and commentators were offering determined opposition to his legislative program.

"All we have on our side," he said, "is the people."

Pointing out that he found on his campaign tour that the people of the nation are concerned about their government, Mr. Truman termed that concern a "fine thing."

"I propose to do all I can to help it along," he added. Then he hurled the threat: "In fact, I may even get on the train again and make another tour around the country to tell the people how their government is getting on."

INFLATION:
Has Two Faces

Observers purportedly on the "inside" of things in Washington regard approval of the congressional committee on the economic report—Mr. Truman's proposal for controls to ward off inflation—as lip service only and argue that none of the committee expect the proposal to win congressional favor.

It was said the favorable committee report was made only to "save face" for the President as he seeks to implement the pledges he made in his election campaign.

THE COMMITTEE vote, which will send the measure to the floor of congress, was 7 to 4 for approval, and that came only after the proposals of the President had been toned down.

Critics of the Truman plan say it poses the unique theory that the country is in the midst of an inflation and deflation period at the same time—a condition admittedly difficult of comprehension.

They assert, too, that it would give dangerous controls to the President at a time when they actually are not needed.

One commentator observed that if any members of the committee considering the proposal had had any idea it would be enacted by the congress, it would have been killed completely before it ever got to the floor of the house or senate.

JAPAN:
Reds Answered

The Russians had an answer to what would happen if they ever moved on Japan.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, in a special interview, declared that he did not expect any attack upon Japan by the Russians, but if that occurred, "we," meaning the United States, "should certainly defend her."

THE ENTIRE IDEA of a Russian attack on Japan held a bizarre aspect. With the U.S. as chief occupation force, how could the Soviets launch an attack of the Japanese without, in effect, making war on the United States?

But, General MacArthur evidently held the subject serious enough to comment about it.

"In case of another war, we do not want Japan to fight," MacArthur said. "Japan's rôle is to be the Switzerland of the Pacific," he explained.

THEN HE MADE a telling point in speculation of a Russian attack on Japan:

"Even if the Soviet government had aggressive intentions toward Japan, Russia would be incapable of carrying them out unless she could secure mastery of the air and either had a far Eastern fleet of her own or possessed the means of neutralizing any action by our fleet.

"Russia could not obtain air predominance," he went on. "On Okinawa I had constructed at the end of the war 25 airfields with the capacity to dispatch B-29's, then our largest bombers, on 3,500 missions a day. The whole of eastern Asia from Singapore to Vladivostok would lie within range of those machines."

HE DID NOT point out that with development of the bombing arm of the air force since the war, even farther distances for bombing purposes could be covered by present-day missile carriers.

Of the function of Japan in the American strategy of defense, MacArthur said:

"We never intended to use Japan as an ally. All we want her to do is remain neutral."

DENTURES:
Save Life

In Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, George Hatfield put the barrel of a .22 calibre rifle in his mouth and pulled the trigger.

The bullet ran around the inside of his false teeth, came out his mouth.

Dr. J. E. Grimby, who treated Hatfield for a cut tongue, said the man was alive because:

The bullet was 10 years old.

The false teeth were in its way.

UNIVERSE:
No Limits?

Since the first man lifted his head and gazed in puzzled awe at a star-studded sky, mankind has been trying to discover the secrets of the universe.

To that end, the huge, 200-inch Palomar mountain telescope was built and put into operation.

But the telescope's first contribution to the sum of man's knowledge of the universe served only to deepen the mystery.

Astronomers using it found that there is no outer edge to the universe of stars, and the look they took was twice as far as man has ever looked before.

The astronomers got some pictures of nebulae a billion light-years distant and spaced about a million light-years apart. Each one is a world of stars, like the Milky Way. The star worlds are about uniformly spread up to the previous limits of sight, about a half-billion light years.

THE NEXT STUDY will be to find whether there is any thinning of the celestial families as sight is extended outward.

One stunning fact the discovery brought home was that there is more than one star for every human being who ever lived. Nearly every star family, or nebulae, contains more than a hundred million individual stars.

Now it is science concurring in the psalm: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handiwork . . ."

Phone Aid Advances

A house subcommittee has approved a bill to let the government make loans for a vast expansion of telephone service to farm areas. The unanimous action came after the committee had adopted amendments aimed at protecting existing telephone companies and encouraging the development of rural telephones by private industry.

The bill authorizes REA to make 35-year loans at 2 per cent interest.

Nanga Parbat

Nanga Parbat is an ice-sheathed giant that rises from the hot valley floor of the Indus river, in northwest India, to a height of 26,660 feet, or more than five miles above sea level, notes the National Geographic society. Although topped by unconquered Everest and half a dozen lesser cloud-breakers of the Himalayan chain, this mountain, in its isolated grandeur, long has been a tantalizing challenge to the "highest yet" fraternity. Twenty-nine men have lost their lives to the mountain during 50-odd years of attempts to scale its crowning peak.

New York State

Extreme length of the state of New York, east and west, exclusive of Long Island, is 320 miles and its depth is 310 miles. Of the total area, 49,576 square miles, inland waters account for 1,550 square miles. The state has more than 8,000 lakes and ponds. In addition there are 3,140 square miles of water in Lakes Ontario and Erie included within the state boundaries.

Rough, Hilly Terrain

The topography of the country over which a car is normally driven has a great deal to do with the rate of tread wear. For instance, a car driven in a hilly or rolling country, over winding roads, will wear down the tread of a tire much more rapidly than in sections of the country where the roads are straight with very few hills and curves.

Wash Water

It has been suggested that 160-degree water will wash clothes cleaner than 140-degree water. Tests at the Virginia Polytechnic institute have yielded this statement: "A temperature of 160 degrees for wash water gives best cleaning results but 140 degrees is nearly as good and is recommended because it is more economical to maintain in the water heating equipment. Temperatures above 170 degrees are not recommended except where boiling is done to sterilize white clothes.

Use of Kerosene

Misuse of kerosene, or coal oil particularly in rural areas, causes hundreds of deaths each year. One common and dangerous practice is the use of kerosene to speed up a slow fire. Kerosene vaporizes when poured into a warm stove, and this vapor may explode, igniting clothing and furniture in the room. Kerosene should never be used to start fires.

Value of Shrubs

Shrubs on the farmstead are needed in abundance to partially hide foundation lines of buildings, define boundaries and screen unsightly objects. Then, too, shrubs lend themselves well in supporting landscape lines at house corners and give reasons for turns in drives or walks.

Feeding Chickens

Feed costs amount to about 60 per cent of the total cost of raising a pullet or keeping a hen a year. Therefore, good feeding practices are necessary for poultry to be most profitable. See the local county agent about good poultry feeding

The Once Over by H.I.Phillips

TRUMAN AND THE TUB

President Truman, in explaining the probable cost of around five million dollars to repair the White House, declared — "My bathroom sagged so that I had begun to fear it would go through the floor."

We can't see why the President was alarmed. He would have been the first president ever to have fallen from one floor to another in his bath; it would have made history.

For a century there might have been signs in the White House: "President Harry S. Truman, 32nd President of the United States, Landed Here" or "On This Spot Harry S. Truman Made the First Crash Landing Ever Made in a White House Bathtub, Glider Type."

Had Harry kept his mouth shut, let the building deteriorate and bravely crashed through the floor in his tub, it might have been far from a calamity so far as his fortunes are concerned. People love the dramatic these days. They crave entertainment and action as never before. There on the ground-floor in his second-floor bathtub amid the rubble, his head unbowed, he would have won a new grip on the public. The picture might have taken a place beside Washington and the Delaware in water exploits. We can imagine some painter glorifying it with an oil entitled, "Truman Crossing the Dilapidated Beams."

The accident would have given the people a new appreciation of what a president has to go through. It would have kindled a mood of warm sympathy and understanding. What man has ever stepped into a bathtub without at least a fleeting fear of an accident? And how many have known what it is to take a tumble in one? Can you fancy their feelings for a President who had stepped into a tub . . . pow! . . . gone down a flight or two!

This is an era of rumor, gossip and suspicion; the story would have spread that the Republicans had undermined the timbers, and this would have increased pity for the President. From coast to coast, across mountains and valleys, over brooks and rivers, from log cabin to mansion the one cry would have gone up: "How's Harry?" The world would have awaited breathlessly the hourly bulletins from the White House:

10 A.M.—The White House morning statement read: "The President is doing well, but still suffering from his own amazement."

Noon—The President is resting. His face is not so red by 10 degrees as was after the mishap.

1 P. M.—Mrs. Truman was allowed to visit the President this afternoon. She asked him simply, "It seems mighty funny to me that you and the tub went down two flights, but your bathrobe remained on the hook upstairs!"

2 P. M.—President Truman got a telegram from Thomas E. Dewey. It read: "I join the bathtub users of America in my deepest gratitude that you piloted the tub to a safe landing and I sincerely hope you will soon be bathing again in the happiness and security which you have a right to expect from our country."

3 P. M.—Henry Wallace was asked to comment on the President's bathtub accident and replied: "It was too far away for me to know the exact facts. All I know is that you hear of nothing like that happening in Russia."

5 P. M.—The doctors said they would permit the President to be interviewed by radio and television. "I only regret" Mr. Truman said, "that I have but one ceiling to give for my country."

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Never Too Late To Learn

Cappy Miller's young son, Squint, is forever coming up with new ideas. Now they're not all world beaters, but Cappy is usually willing to give them a try.

Seems Squint found a new way to clear brush. They take two tractors, about thirty feet apart, and connect them with a heavy chain weighted down on the ground with old iron. First they both go parallel in one direction, then they go back over the same swath in the opposite direction and up comes the brush—roots and all. Worked fine and saved time.

That's why things go so well at the Miller farm. Cappy is open-minded, tolerant of new ideas and new ways of doing. He doesn't think his way is the only way.

From where I sit, a little tolerance will make things go better for all of us. You respect my views and I'll respect yours—whether it's on farming, politics, or choosing between an ice cream soda or a temperate glass of beer.

"Land O'Lakes relieves me of marketing worries, so I have more time to concentrate on getting a quality product. Then too, I get help on quality problems from the Land O'Lakes laboratory and field service.

Called One Great Hour it will be heard over every one of the 1092 stations and the four major networks; CBS, NBC, CBS Mutual plus hundreds of non-network stations. The program will feature great names, great living drama, and great music. LOOKING AHEAD

by GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

A Dangerous Tax

There's talk in Washington of a $4 billion tax increase. If Congress permits this new siphoning of income and savings from the people into the federal treasury, the results can be dangerous for the whole nation. This is fact, regardless of whether or not the President and his administration would be cramped in spending a proposed $42 billion budget.

Of course, like our Senator McClellan told homefolks recently: Mr. Truman's program means that taxes can go only one way—up, up, up. Senator Fulbright, our other distinguished senator, tried to ease the misgivings of the economy-minded by pointing out that saving federal money and reducing taxes is a question of "what you are willing to give up." That is a problem, all right. Too many of us have the attitude of the well known politician, who said he had never voted for a tax bill nor against an appropriations bill.

Justify Spending

If we manage to fool ourselves into thinking the other fellow is going to have to pay for the handouts, we then show no enthusiasm about economy. Citizens and congressmen alike, too often see economy as a fine thing when it's not close to home, but work like mad for all the government "aid" they can get—for themselves.

One thing is wrong with the question our Senator asked about what we would give up. It puts the burden of proof on the citizen who would economize! That proof belongs elsewhere. Every bureaucrat who demands funds should explain and justify the expenditure of every dollar!

Wherein lies the danger to the nation in heavier taxes at this time? It is proposed that the burden of a $4 billion tax increase be placed upon corporations and businesses. This might look to some like an easy way to shift the tax load onto somebody else. Actually, a tax that is shouldered by business is still borne by the people—because people buy the products of corporations that are owned by people.

Don't Kill Incentive

At present the nation's business corporations pay a 38 per cent tax on income. Earnings distributed to owners may get taxed up to 92 per cent. (Other taxes, also, are levied upon corporations.) Tremendous sums, therefore, are handed to Uncle Sam by industry. But right now, the nation's economists are agreed that America's industry must have huge amounts of additional capital for growth and for expansion. There's danger, if instead these billions must be poured into Washington.

Any industrial plant that is not able to spend money continually for expansion or for newer, better equipment is a corporation moving toward failure. An amount roughly equal to the President's proposed budget of $42 billion is the least we ought to put this year into our industrial plant. If America is to have the industrial strength it should have, if jobs are to remain plentiful, and if wages are to be high—then we had better have a care about penalizing our industry. America can lose out by exacting too much "take" from business.

Unless industry is allowed to expand, modernize, and meet today's needs, there'll be nothing at all to tax one of these days. When taxes take what would be invested, and when incentive to invest is killed—the country will go into reverse. Another $4 billion in taxes on corporations would be most unwise.

Water for Corn

Corn planted on poor soil requires more water to produce a given amount of corn than does corn growing on fertile soil. In other words, a liberal supply of fertilizer makes corn plants more efficient in using available water.

Hand Soaps

Corn meal is added to the "mix" in making some abrasive hand soaps, such as those widely used by mechanics, to give the soap a mild rubbing action for a faster, more thorough cleaning job.

Milk Consumption

About 40 per cent of the milk produced in this country is consumed as fluid milk and cream. More than one-half of the milk produced is utilized in the making of manufactured products.

Corn Borer

DDT was recommended for the first time in 1948 for the control of the European corn borer in field corn. Corn borer losses in 1947 amounted to about 50 million bushels, or 97 million dollars.

Streamline Wiring

From two to five miles of electrical wiring are concealed in the walls and ceilings of the average streamline passenger car built by Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing Co.

Cotton Acreage

Acreage planted to cotton in the United States has dropped from 42,600,000 acres in the 1925-29 period to around 20 to 23 million acres during the past few years.

Meat Figures

Farmers probably receive a higher per cent of the consumer dollar for meat than for any other farm product.

Weeds in Winter Garden

Keep down weeds by mulching or cultivation; they do just as much damage in winter as in summer.

Cottage Cheese

A cup and a half of cottage cheese furnishes the same amount of calcium as a cup of milk.

'Scantia'

Quite appropriately, the Communist newspaper in Bucharest is named "Scantia."

Simple Precaution

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Red Personnel Shakeup Stirs World As Nations Ponder Meaning of Act; Time Running Out on Rent Controls

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MOLOTOV PROMOTED?

World Speculates on Premier Stalin's Plans

Out of the welter of world speculation on the significance of Russia's naming Andrei Y. Vyshinski as foreign minister—replacing Vyacheslav M. Molotov—the British appeared most confident of their interpretation.

Senior British diplomats had no hesitancy in declaring that Molotov is being groomed to step into Stalin's shoes whenever the Red dictator dies or retires from the scene.

INFORMATION from London was to the effect that the opinion apparently is based on reports which British Ambassador Sir Maurice Peterson had sent from Moscow. They said Peterson warned against expecting any change in Russian foreign policy as a result of Molotov's release as foreign minister. Andrei Gromyko, the "walking man" of the United Nations setup—so called because of the many times he has walked out of U.N. sessions—became Vyshinski's assistant.

All these diplomats agreed that Stalin would remain the No. 1 man in Russia even if he should quit the post of prime minister. His supreme position, they speculated, would be safeguarded by his personal prestige and his post as Communist party secretary general and politburo member.

THEY CONCEDED, however, that Stalin, 69 and ailing, may wish to be free of administrative chores.

Informants made it clear that Ambassador Peterson himself did not make an outright prediction that Stalin contemplates retiring from the prime minister's job. They said the sense of his reports merely led British diplomats to think that is a possibility.

The interesting thing, however, was the wild and widespread speculation set off in the world by a change of Russian personnel at high policy level. This reaction served to emphasize world jitteriness in the "cold war" with the Soviets.

RENT CONTROL:

Tik-Tok, Tik-Tok

With the continuing tie-up of business in the senate because of a filibuster on a rules procedure, congress had been racing against the clock in the matter of rent controls.

RENT CURBS were due to expire March 31. Congressmen generally were agreed that unless they were extended by that date, nothing more could be done this session to save or renew such controls.

Meanwhile, Republican sentiment in the house was that rent controls should be taken out of federal hands and turned over to the respective states. A mass meeting of GOP members of the house overwhelmingly supported the idea of ending federal rent control.

It was reported that Republicans favored only a 90-day extension of curbs and many wanted all controls to end with the fixed expiration date. They also took the position that if any controls were continued, the house first should adopt an amendment by Democratic member Paul Brown of Georgia providing that landlords, as far as practicable, should be "given a reasonable return on the fair value of their property under rent controls."

MANY CAPITOL observers expressed a conviction that the apparent trend toward relaxation of rent curbs was stemming from the effective lobbying of rental property owners and their organized groups.

But whatever was to be done to protect the public from gouging on the part of some landlords would have to be done fast. Time was swiftly running out.

MEXICO:

Oil for U. S.

Mexico had relented, the animosity of the old expropriation days was over, and American interests were to set up again in the oil business "south of the border."

Antonio Bermudez, director of Petroleos Mexicanos, announced that a drilling contract had been signed with a group of California oil men formed by Edwin W. Pauley and two American oil companies.

Senor Bermudez said the U. S. group's chief job would be drilling of wells in Tabasco and Varacruz states.

Under terms of the agreement, the U. S. group will not be paid for dry wells.

The Mexican organization would set aside the proceeds of the sale of 50 per cent of the production obtained from wells drilled by the mentioned companies to pay off their expenses in drilling productive wells.

Stalin's Man

This is a recent portrait of Andrei Y. Vyshinsky, who has been elevated to the position of Russian foreign minister.

CHURCHMEN:

50 More Seized

More churchmen in countries behind the "iron curtain" were coming to know what it means to suffer for the Cross.

Bulgarian security police had seized approximately 50 more Protestant clergymen.

THE LATEST ROUNDUP was disclosed as 15 other Protestants were sentenced on charges ranging from treason and spying for the United States and Britain to black market money transactions. All 15 had pleaded guilty.

By now the pattern of church conflict in Soviet-dominated countries was becoming clear. The Russians would not tolerate a setup where the church might act independently of the state.

It mattered little whether the faith being prosecuted was Protestant or Catholic—the aim was the same, subjugate it and its adherents to the will of the state.

THE KREMLIN could not risk men having other gods than Stalin, could not risk continuance or spread of a thesis built upon the dignity of the individual and his oneness with his Creator.

The most terrible thing was that there was nothing anyone could do. Christian nations could not make war on the Soviets for religious persecution, however extensive such persecution might grow.

For the moment, men of good will could only pray for divine aid, hoping that retribution would finally overtake the agency which was subjecting Christian men to torture and imprisonment.

RICH MEN:

One "Fed up"

"I found something was wrong with the wealthy class and I think a whole lot of them would be better off if they had to work."

JOSEPH E. UIHLEIN, 73, a senior member of one of the nation's wealthiest brewery families was fed up. Delivering himself of the above statement, he went on to say that he was resigning immediately as a director of the First Wisconsin National Bank so no one connected with the institution would be embarrased by his actions.

Uihlein's consideration of his co-directors was understandable. For the former vice-president of the vast Schlitz brewing company was planning to devote his full time to the unionization of "white collar" workers in the United States.

"I believe five to six million can better their lot by joining white-collar unions," Uihlein declared. "I am not in it for any honor for myself, but only through a desire to help the working classes."

CONTINUING, he explained that "I have been thinking about this for about 15 years."

Joseph and his brother Erwin, now president of Schlitz, have been at odds recently over Joseph's suggestion that the brewery establish a million-dollar annual welfare fund for its employes by contributing 25 cents for each barrel of beer sold.

COW'S THAT, FELLOWS?

Yukon Lions Would Re-Ensilo "Grady"

The Yukon, Oklahoma Lions club was strictly on it's toes—members organized a "committee to Put The Cow Back in The Silo."

The cow, of course, was "Grady," who had captured national attention and country-wide press coverage when she leaped into a silo and there resulted great puzzlement as to how she was to be freed.

"Grady," for whom owner Bill Mach paid $1,000, had jumped through a silo door 17 by 25½ inches. When the AP broke the story, the nation was agog.

However, farm editor Ralph Partridge, of the Denver Post, came up with the answer. "Grady" was given a sedative, well-greased and then pushed and pulled through the door by which she had entered.

Albino Horses

While cases of albino horses are known, ordinary white horses are not born white.

Horses of certain colors, particularly dappled grays, become lighter as they grow older—until they become pure white. Such horses do not give birth to white colts which are so rare that they are virtually unknown.

Many Arabian horses are light gray at birth and become pure white at the age of four or five years.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Could you tell me how to mend a marble table top which is broken straight across. Of course, I'd want it to show as little as possible, but at the same time, be strong.

ANSWER: Marble in thin slabs, as table tops, when broken, can be permanently mended only when supported by a reinforcement. Plasterboard can be used for this, or a strip of board. The reinforcement is cut to fit within the frame. The marble is turned upside down, the edges of the break are cemented and pressed together, a thin mixture of plaster of Paris is spread on the back of the marble, and the reinforcement placed in position. After a number of hours for hardening, the marble is returned to place.

LETTER FOR SPECIAL DELIVERY

Hon. Harry S. Truman,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Mr. President:

It pains me to note that you, who over the long pull have seemed to me a horse-sense fellow who knew baloney when he saw it and who didn't like it thin, thick or medium, have now taken up that old cry about the newspapers being in a deep plot against the people. Harry, you know better.

"There are no full-page ads for our side," you say in taking a dig at the press. Now that is plain hassenpfeffer. All the page ads in opposition to your policies or acts in a year, if stacked end on end, would be completely lost in the thousands of pages which the American newspapers have devoted to you in reporting your speeches and your programs. The space devoted to any one of your speeches in the papers of the country would swamp the total space consumed by all those full-page ads over a period of six months. The ads get into few papers; no paper fails to report your speeches to its fullest ability.

Few Presidents in history have had a friendlier press. The note of kindness is to be found, even in the criticisms. The newspapers go to great expense to give you every break. It is doubtful if any occupant of the White House in 25 years has been more warmly treated by the newspapers of this country from coast to coast and from border to border.

At work or at play you get a million columns of newspaper space and any honest publicity expert in your own party would admit that the advertising is mostly good and that all the dough your opponets could lay a hand on wouldn't be enough to get that much space for their views. So you must be kidding when you say, "There are no full pages for our side."

"Selfish interests are on the job year in and year out, seven days a week and 24 hours a day. They work through the editorial pages, the columnists and the commentators they control," you assert, "They twist and misrepresent the measures the people voted for."

Well, Harry, may the press of America never be as unfair to you as you are to the press when you make a crack like that. The fact twisters don't last long on any paper. No newspaper can misrepresent things long and survive.

In a democratic country where a free press has men of all parties and beliefs running newspapers, you don't expect them all to be 100 per cent for everything you propose, do you?

The press is one of America's great institutions, Harry. It is mighty important to the American system. It is important to the Democratic party, the Republican party and any other party. To deliberately undermine its prestige, create an atmosphere of distrust in its fairness and foster the notion that it is a tool of the privileged few is bad stuff, Mr. President. In every great crisis the press is a Number One Need. You've needed it, Harry. And you've had it as few Americans have had it "year in and year out, seven days a week and 24 hours a day." I thought you knew.

Yours in surprise
ELMER.

Cuff Stuff

Walter Donnelly, slated as the new undersecretary of state in charge of South American affairs, used to work in the circulation department of the New Haven Register back home . . . Video does the darndest things. As for instance Sid Caesar's use of that old Willie Howard skit on the interrupting waiter, with no credit or apology to anybody. And it was played on another program only a few weeks back . . . "Knock On Any Door," widely proclaimed as a study in juvenile crime and a deterrent, is just another glorification of a hoodlum, with enough murders and stickups to keep a kid absorbed for weeks . . .

Excluded!

Fritz Kuhn, former Bund leader in America, has been freed by a German court. His sentence was cut to two years—already served! And his property—of which he has none—was ordered confiscated! The blind lady known as Justice can claim he didn't even go to a neutral corner after slugging her.

Fritz announces he will now try to regain his American citizenship. He is willing, as we get it, to be a good sport and pardon us.

'Vertical' Expansion Boosts Per Acre Output, Helps Farmers Reduce Crop Production Costs

Bumper Corn Yields Are Reward for Building Soil Fertility.

CHICAGO—You can increase your farm's crop producing size without adding a single acre, by "vertical expansion," declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement made public here.

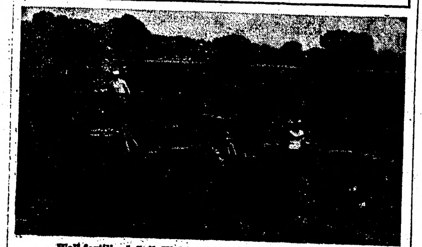
"Vertical expansion" means building up the soil's fertility level so it will give you more bushels per acre, the statement points out.

"Higher yields mean lower production costs," it says. "That will help you make money when the present seller's market is over and farm prices are lower.

"No magic is needed for 'double-decking' your land. It simply involves adding needed plant nutrients and organic matter to the soil. With more organic matter, your crops get more use of the rain you get. Fertilizers are more efficient, too.

"To get that organic matter you should hitch your production program to a rotation in which deep-rooted legumes are the key crop. To get good legume growth you have to feed the soil phosphate and potash fertilizer. Other things are important, too. Good land use and conservation methods are essential. You should give back to the soil all possible animal manure and crop residues."

Thrifty Alfalfa Catches Depend on Tillage, Seeding Methods and Plenty of Plant Food



Well-fertilized Soil Yields More Tons of Hay Per Acre.

CHICAGO — Whether you get thrifty or poor catches of alfalfa or sweet clover depends less on the crop that precedes the legume in the rotation than on the soil management and tillage practices you use at legume seeding time, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Corn-soybean farmers have complained of clover failures following soybeans," the statement says. "But tests by Dr. F. A. Frank, research agronomist in soybeans at Purdue University Agricultural Experiment station showed slightly better legume yields following soybeans than corn, when other factors were well handled.

"Good nutrition is a must for good legume stands. To develop sturdy root systems and build a thick growth above the ground, clover or alfalfa needs plenty of fertilizer carrying phosphate and potash. Liming, based on soil tests is vital, too.

"Your seeding methods are equally important. You need a firm seed bed, free of clods. You should use seeding methods that will give shallow planting and good coverage."

Electric Roaster Is Kitchen Handyman

A large chicken, vegetables and dessert may be cooked at once in a roaster. The lid of this model has a glass panel in the top. When roaster is being filled lid may be hooked into handle at end to be out of way.

Whether it's hot dogs, steaks or chops, they can be broiled to a turn in a roaster with a broiler attachment. Lid of this roaster has sliding-cover vents to control the air circulation for browning fowls, roast and broiling other meats.

AN ELECTRIC roaster is a "little range" in itself, according to the Rural Home Editor of nationally - circulated Capper's Farmer. In it, with the use of attachments, food may be steamed, roasted, baked, pan-broiled, boiled or fried.

"A whole meal may be prepared in a roaster," she writes in the magazine read by 1,300,000 farm families. "This might include a roast, vegetables and a hot dessert. Cakes, pies, rolls and bread may be baked the same as in a range oven. Or a large quantity of food such as baked beans to be served to a group may be prepared at one time. It is also useful for canning when using the boiling-water bath method."

"Since the roaster may be used on any ordinary electric outlet, but not with drop cords and extension cords, it is convenient to use in any home supplied with electricity. For the woman who generally cooks with coal or wood it is especially handy in summertime."

Sound construction is as important in the roaster as in a range. A strong body, heatproof handles, perfect-fitting joints, heavy plating and enameling, all indicate good construction. Insulation on sides and at bottom should be thick enough to retain heat as well as to protect surface on which roaster is placed.

A thermostatic control on a roaster makes it possible to hold temperature at point desired. A timer clock to start and stop cooking is an additional feature with some models.

Senior Play April 5th

Creepy noises, eerie lights, women's screams and clutching claws that snatch unsuspecting characters off the stage right before your very eyes, are only a FEW of the thrills you will experience when you see that famous mystery comedy play, "TIGER HOUSE", to be presented Tuesday evening April 5th, at 8 P. M. by the Senior Class at the H. S. Auditorium.

But don't be afraid! Of course. you will be exited. You might even scream. But just when you expect the worst you will start laughing at some of the rib-tickling comedy which always comes along just at the right moment. It is this variety which makes the play so amusing. Thrills one moment, comedy the next, romance the next. And it all leads to an unexpected end that will leave you gasping.

Much time, work and careful planning have all resulted in what is hoped to be one of the most ambitious productions that has ever been presented locally. The play itself needed careful rehearsing as the action rapid, characterizations all vastly different and well written.

The cast is as follows:

Erma Lowrrie	Marlys Tweet
Aunt Sophia -	Evangeline Rokke
The Mystery Woman	Bearrice Larson
Peggy Van Ess	Betty Dyrud
Yami	Glenn Tonneslun

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Remember How We Talked?

It went like this at the Hooper's the other night. Hap's eighteen-year-old daughter is talking about "a real gone guy—solid—out of this world, but def."

"Now what kind of language is that?" Hap barks. "Can't she speak English?"

"I'll translate it for you," Ma Hooper says, "in the language of the twenties, when you were about twenty years old. She simply means this fellow is the 'cat's whiskers.' Remember how we used to talk sometimes?" Hap went back to reading his newspaper.

From where I sit, it's easy to criticize the other person when we don't take a good long look at ourselves. Sure, there'll always be some differences. I'm fond of a temperate glass of beer and maybe you would prefer ginger ale—but let's just live and let live. Because when we go out of our way to find things to find fault with in others, chances are they can find a few in us, too.

Sugar Cane Research

More sugar cane is being produced in Louisiana as the result of research by scientists of the bureau of plant industry, soils, and agricultural engineers on the control of alligator weed with 2,4-D. Protection from this weed pest saves Louisiana sugar cane growers a conservative $5,000,000 a year, says the U. S. department of agriculture.

In Defense of Hog

The idea that hogs are filthy in their habits is untrue, says the World Book Encyclopedia. Hogs will not stuff themselves with food the way other animals—and humans—sometimes will. Hogs wriggle in the mud because it helps keep them cool and removes extra oil on their skins.

Early Railroading

Railroading in California started the hard way. The first two locomotives, ordered by the Sacramento Valley railroad, had to be shipped around Cape Horn by sailing vessel and barged up the Sacramento river from San Francisco. Operations on the road were opened on February 22, 1856, between Sacramento and Folsom, a distance of 23 miles. This line is now a part of the Southern Pacific system.

Vacuum Cleaner Care

If a vacuum cleaner must pick up pins and threads, its efficiency is bound to go down. When a cleaner has caught up thread and hairs in the brush, take a moment to cut them out. While this is being done, check to see whether the tips of the brush extend just past the tip of the nozzle. They should if the cleaner is to do a first-rate cleaning job.

White Ash and Rattlers

Is it true that rattlesnakes do not live where white ash trees grow? There is some justification for this idea. White ash grows generally on a rich, moist soil in thick woods and near water, while rattlesnakes prefer as a rule open, dry, stony sunny places. Thus, they are not likely to be together.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Senate Debate-Curb Row Renewed; Rent Curb Bill Favors 'Home Rule'; Pit Walkout Slims Coal Stockpile

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FILIBUSTER:

Truce Called

The long, weary talkathon in the U. S. senate was over — but the battle over the proposed curb on senate debate was by no means at an end.

A compromise had been effected with the aid of GOP support, but the administration was committed to oppose the peace formula which had been adopted.

THE FILIBUSTER had continued 15 days over a proposed change in senate rules. There was no doubt that southern senators, who led the talkathon, had emerged victorious. The talkfest was staged to delay President Truman's civil rights bill, and it had done just that.

The provisions of the peace formula were:

1. Unlimited debate in the senate would be permitted only upon a motion to take up a rules change.

2. Debate on all other matters could be curbed by the "yes" vote of 64 of the chamber's 96 members.

Majority leader Scott Lucas (D., Ill.) attacked the compromise proposal as a "move to perpetuate the filibuster."

"Of course I'll oppose it," he told newsmen. "It's an effort to take the senate back 40 years."

MEANWHILE Truman Democrats were reported launching a new parliamentary move to clamp down on debate. The senate already had overturned a ruling by Vice-President Barkley that discussion to take up the proposed rule change could be ended if two-thirds of those voting desired. The vote over-ruling Barkley was 46 to 41. Administration leaders hoped to find some way to another ruling and, if they could change as many as three votes, a Barkley ruling could be sustained.

Mr. Truman had proved he could win the presidency without support of the South, but it appeared it would be difficult to put through a legislative program without support of southern senators.

JOHN L. LEWIS:

Herald of Spring

To coal miners and coal-using industrialists of the nation the infallible sign of spring is neither the robin nor crocus—it is John L. Lewis' annual call for the miners to leave the pits.

LEWIS CALLED, and the miners heard and obeyed. More than 400,000 miners began a two-week layoff, ordered, Lewis said, as a memorial to miners killed and injured last year.

Skeptics were caustic. They saw another, more understandable reason for the work stoppage. The nation's huge stockpile of coal, some 70 million tons, was looming too large in the Lewis eye. Unless this stockpile were materially decreased soon, the president of the United Mine Workers would be in a less tenable bargaining position later on.

Another reason advanced for the layoff was miners' opposition to the appointment by President Truman of Dr. James Boyd as head of the U.S. bureau of mines. Advocates of this idea suggested Lewis' move was intended to intimidate a senate committee considering Boyd's appointment.

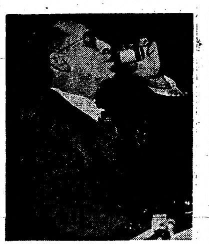
IF THAT WERE TRUE, the attempt was a dismal failure. On the second day of the walkout, the senate committee approved Boyd's appointment by a vote of 10 to 1—admittedly to show Lewis that its members would not be intimidated.

But the U.S. couldn't shrug off the Lewis move. Already 11 railroads had ordered 57,425 workers furloughed. Coal is a vital freight item for these roads. The payroll loss to the railroaders alone would be at least five million dollars for the two weeks of idleness.

THE MINERS themselves stood to lose at least 68 million dollars in wages. In two states steps were taken to file unemployment compensation claims to take up the slack. But there was a big question whether the states would approve the claims, because so many states do not approve claims where loss of employment is caused by action of the claimant, himself — such as might be ruled to be the case in the voluntary walkout of the miners.

Meanwhile most miners' families prepared for a slim Easter. There would be little money to buy new bonnets or dresses.

Bottoms Up!



Attorney Carl J. Stephens of the Iowa farm bureau takes a swig of hog cholera virus in house of representatives in attempt to show virus was not dangerous to humans. A veterinarian declared Stephens, after drinking the virus, might be a cholera carrier for at least 19 days.

RENT CONTROL:

Home Rule Favored

The administration's legislative program was bogging down at every turn in congress.

Rent controls, vital to millions of Americans, were being prolonged, but not along lines desired by President Truman and his advisers.

THE HOUSE had passed a rent control measure, but fixed extension at 15 months, instead of the 24 the administration wanted, and provided for home-rule application, a factor opposed by the administration.

If the senate accepted this version of a rent control act, it would be well for all concerned in the nation to begin ascertaining views of their local rent control boards, for that's where authority to relax or continue rent controls would rest.

The bill, passed by a vote of 261 to 153 is now in the hands of the senate for action and administration forces are reported ready to renew their fight for more adequate rent curbs there. Action on a senate version of rent controls had been blocked by the filibuster.

CONCERNING local-option authority to do away with rent controls, Tighe Wood, federal rent administrator, expressed the opinion it might not work out too badly. He went as far as to say that "I would be willing to bet that 90 per cent of the 1,100 counties where we have rent control will not lift rent control under this amendment."

Many Americans would wonder about that, and hope the housing chief was correct in his views. If he were wrong, and the senate enacted the house bill as drawn, a grave housing emergency might be created overnight.

Wood, however, saw two essentials lacking in the house bill. He termed these as criminal penalties for landlords overcharging on rent, and authority to recontrol apartments in residential hotels.

STAFF OF LIFE:

Cost Probe Due

The housewife who had read that the price of wheat and flour had gone down, but who found bread prices remaining up, had company if she had begun to puzzle about the paradox.

The senate of the United States was becoming interested, too, in this situation. And, a broad senate investigation into prices of bread—along with other things — was "ready to go," according to Senator Maybank (D., S.C.).

AS CHAIRMAN of the senate banking committee, he called on government agencies for latest data on prices—especially the spread between prices consumers pay and those farmers get for their products.

The chairman said the price investigation wants to know:

Why are bread prices at their level in view of the wheat and flour price drops?

Why hasn't lard, soap and shortening prices fallen off more?

American housewives also would like to have answers to those questions.

"BIOLOGICAL WARFARE" BUGABOO

Germs as Weapons Potent but Exaggerated

James Forrestal, retiring secretary of defense, has broken an official three-year military silence on the use or discussion of the term "biological warfare" and in a formal statement characterized much that has been written about the potency of germ weapons as "exaggerated, fantastic or unduly spectacular."

Forrestal advised the public that "it would be folly to underestimate the potentialities of biological warfare" and he disclosed that research had shown that "germs or their poisonous products could be used effectively as weapons of war." At the same time he denied the existence of any "biological super-weapon." The secretary's statement ended a secrecy curb.

Sulfas Cause Egg Slump—but

The American Veterinary Medical association warns poultrymen against reaching for the sulfa bottle too frequently.

In a recent experiment, the production of 671 birds given sulfa for periods of from three to six days dropped 50 per cent; and, compared with a control group of 430, it took the sulfa-treated hens a month to reach a rate of production equaling that of the untreated hens.

The association points out, however, that this argument is not against the use of sulfa drugs when needed, but rather a note of warning against their overuse.

IF YOU'VE EVER come home at five o'clock after an afternoon of club activities, have you wondered how to get a roast on the table and a meal cooked to completion within the hour?

The solution to this problem lies in cooking the meal in one of those efficient utensils known as a pressure cooker or pressure pan. In an hour, and in many cases, less time, you can have a steaming hot meal with meat, vegetables and potatoes on the table for a hungry family. All this can be accomplished with no more previous preparation than marketing.

SPECIAL TODAY CHUCK ROAST

Foods cooked under pressure cook quickly because the steam is held within the utensil. Food values are saved, too, so you can serve more healthful meals to the family. And, if you're a busy homemaker, you can save hours of time in the preparation of foods which usually take three of four hours to cook.

All of the recipes given today use meats that take long cooking time under ordinary circumstances. Use the directions carefully and follow the manufacturers' directions for using whatever kind of cooker you have.

* * *

THE RECOMMENDED pressure for most dishes including meats is 15 pounds. Study your cooker to see how this is obtained and maintained.

* * *

(Serves 4)

- 1½ pounds ham shank
- 1 cup water
- 4 small potatoes, peeled and halved
- 4 small onions, peeled
- 1 small turnip, peeled and sliced
- 4 medium carrots, scraped
- 1 small cabbage, quartered
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper

Place ham and water in cooker. Adjust cover, exhaust air and bring pressure to 15 pounds. Cook for 20 minutes. Reduce pressure and open cooker. Add prepared vegetables and pepper. Adjust cover, exhaust air and bring pressure again to 15 pounds. Cook for five to eight minutes, depending upon size of vegetables. Cool and open cooker and serve at once.

CANNED TOMATO sauce added to a pot roast gives you a wonderfully rich but economical gravy, as in the following recipe:

Savory Pot Roast
(Serves 6-10)

- 3½-4 pounds pot roast of beef (chuck, round or brisket, boned)
- 1 clove garlic
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 2 tablespoons drippings
- 1 (8-ounce) can tomato sauce
- 2 tablespoons cornstarch
- ¼ cup cold water

Rub the cut surface of the meat with cut surface of garlic clove. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Brown in the pressure cooker in the drippings. Add canned tomato sauce. Close cooker and exhaust air. Bring pressure to 15 pounds and cook 11 minutes to the pound. Cool cooker, following manufacturer's directions, and open. Remove meat to serving platter. Mix cornstarch to a smooth paste with water and add to tomato sauce in cooker. Season as desired. Stir over low heat to a clear rich gravy.

Ham with Escalloped Potatoes
(Serves 4-5)

- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1½ tablespoons flour
- 1½ cups milk
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- 1 small onion grated
- 1 tablespoon fat
- 2 pounds ham slice, cut in serving pieces
- 5 medium potatoes, peeled and sliced

Melt butter, blend in flour, add milk, salt and pepper. Stir constantly and cook until smooth, Add onion. Brown ham until golden brown in pressure pan, then remove from cooker. Place potatoes in bottom of cooker and cover with white sauce. Lay ham on potatoes. Adjust cover, exhaust air, and bring to 15 pounds pressure. Cook 12 minutes. Cool cooker, and serve meal at once.

DOES THE FAMILY like meltingly delicious spaghetti? Here's the easy way to cook it.

Spaghetti with Meat Sauce
(Serves 6)

- 2 tablespoons salad oil
- 1 pound ground beef
- 1 clove garlic, chopped
- 1 No. 2 can tomatoes
- 1 (8-ounce) can tomato sauce
- 2 medium onions, chopped
- 1 teaspoon chili powder
- 1 green pepper, chopped
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 (8-ounce) package spaghetti
- Parmesan cheese

Combine all ingredients except cheese in pressure pan. Adjust cover and exhaust air. Bring to 15 pounds pressure and cook for 12 - 15 minutes. Serve over cooked spaghetti, topped with cheese.

Wiener Schnitzel
(Serves 6)

- 2 slices veal round, cut ½-inch thick
- 4 tablespoons flour
- Salt and pepper
- 1 teaspoon paprika
- 1 cup sliced onions
- ½ lemon, sliced thin
- 1 cup soured cream

Cut veal into serving size pieces and dredge in flour mixed with salt and pepper. Heat cooker, add oil and paprika. Brown pieces of veal on both sides. Add onion and saute slightly. Place a slice of lemon on each piece of veal. Add sour cream. Adjust cover, exhaust air and bring to 15 pounds pressure. Cook 15 minutes. Cool cooker and serve veal, garnished with parsley.

LYNN SAYS:
Pressure Cookers Have Many Uses

It's amazingly quick to make custards in the pressure cooker. Simply pour the custard mixture into small, heat-proof cups and set on the pressure cooker rack with a little water at the bottom. Cook for 2 minutes at 15 pounds pressure.

Molds are now available for puddings that fit right into pressure pans. They steam puddings perfectly and swiftly.

The pressure pan may be used just as any other kettle for sauces, dressings, etc. without the cover.

If you want to cook several different kinds of vegetables at the same time in a pressure pan, select those which require the same cooking time.

To soften cereals properly and to bring out their full flavor, use the pressure pan. It saves time.

Many of the pressure pans can be used for processing fruit and vegetables for canning. Follow directions.

Colonial Laws Launched Public School Systems

The Massachusetts' school law of 1642, which declared that all children should be taught to read, was unprecedented in the English-speaking world.

At first, the colonial school system was — traditionally — voluntary and subordinate to the church. When it became apparent that voluntary efforts could not guarantee general education, the general court enacted the law of 1642.

In 1647, the Massachusetts' general court set another precedent by ordering a school system established and maintained, fixing the tradition by which educational facilities are provided to enable the state to better enforce the educational obligation it imposes upon parents.

Sugar Cane Research

More sugar cane is being produced in Louisiana as the result of research by scientists of the bureau of plant industry, soils, and agricultural engineers on the control of alligator weed with 2,4-D. Protection from this weed pest saves Louisiana sugar cane growers a conservative $5,000,000 a year, says the U. S. department of agriculture.

In Defense of Hog

The idea that hogs are filthy in their habits is untrue, says the World Book Encyclopedia. Hogs will not stuff themselves with food the way other animals—and humans—sometimes will. Hogs wriggle in the mud because it helps keep them cool and removes extra oil on their skins.

Densely Settled

Population of Java, its area of 48,000 square miles about equal to New York state, increased from 4,000,000 in 1815 to around 48,000,000 today. Its population density, approximately 1,000 per square mile, is the world's highest.

Early Railroading

Railroading in California started the hard way. The first two locomotives, ordered by the Sacramento Valley railroad, had to be shipped around Cape Horn by sailing vessel and barged up the Sacramento river from San Francisco. Operations on the road were opened on February 22, 1856, between Sacramento and Folsom, a distance of 23 miles. This line is now a part of the Southern Pacific system.

Vacuum Cleaner Care

If a vacuum cleaner must pick up pins and threads, its efficiency is bound to go down. When a cleaner has caught up thread and hairs in the brush, take a moment to cut them out. While this is being done, check to see whether the tips of the brush extend just past the tip of the nozzle. They should if the cleaner is to do a first-rate cleaning job.

White Ash and Rattlers

Is it true that rattlesnakes do not live where white ash trees grow? There is some justification for this idea. White ash grows generally on a rich, moist soil in thick woods and near water, while rattlesnakes prefer as a rule open, dry, stony sunny places. Thus, they are not likely to be together.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Senate Debate-Curb Row Renewed; Rent Curb Bill Favors 'Home Rule'; Pit Walkout Slims Coal Stockpile

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FILIBUSTER:

Truce Called

The long, weary talkathon in the U. S. senate was over — but the battle over the proposed curb on senate debate was by no means at an end.

A compromise had been effected with the aid of GOP support, but the administration was committed to oppose the peace formula which had been adopted.

THE FILIBUSTER had continued 15 days over a proposed change in senate rules. There was no doubt that southern senators, who led the talkathon, had emerged victorious. The talkfest was staged to delay President Truman's civil rights bill, and it had done just that.

The provisions of the peace formula were:

1. Unlimited debate in the senate would be permitted only upon a motion to take up a rules change.
2. Debate on all other matters could be curbed by the "yes" vote of 64 of the chamber's 96 members.

"Of course I'll oppose it," he told newsmen. "It's an effort to take the senate back 40 years."

MEANWHILE Truman Democrats were reported launching a new parliamentary move to clamp down on debate. The senate already had overturned a ruling by Vice-President Barkley that discussion to take up the proposed rule change could be ended if two-thirds of those voting desired. The vote over-ruling Barkley was 46 to 41. Administration leaders hoped to find some way to another ruling and, if they could change as many as three votes, a Barkley ruling could be sustained.

Mr. Truman had proved he could win the presidency without support of the South, but it appeared it would be difficult to put through a legislative program without support of southern senators.

JOHN L. LEWIS:

Herald of Spring

To coal miners and coal-using industrialists of the nation the infallible sign of spring is neither the robin nor crocus—it is John L. Lewis' annual call for the miners to leave the pits.

LEWIS CALLED, and the miners heard and obeyed. More than 400,000 miners began a two-week layoff, ordered, Lewis said, as a memorial to miners killed and injured last year.

Skeptics were caustic. They saw another, more understandable reason for the work stoppage. The nation's huge stockpile of coal, some 70 million tons, was looming too large in the Lewis eye. Unless this stockpile were materially decreased soon, the president of the United Mine Workers would be in a less tenable bargaining position later on.

Another reason advanced for the layoff was miners' opposition to the appointment by President Truman of Dr. James Boyd as head of the U.S. bureau of mines. Advocates of this idea suggested Lewis' move was intended to intimidate a senate committee considering Boyd's appointment.

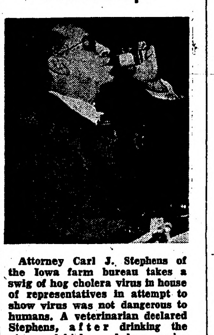
IF THAT WERE TRUE, the attempt was a dismal failure. On the second day of the walkout, the senate committee approved Boyd's appointment by a vote of 10 to 1—admittedly to show Lewis that its members would not be intimidated.

But the U.S. couldn't shrug off the Lewis move. Already 11 railroads had ordered 57,425 workers furloughed. Coal is a vital freight item for these roads. The payroll loss to the railroaders alone would be at least five million dollars for the two weeks of idleness.

THE MINERS themselves stood to lose at least 68 million dollars in wages. In two states steps were taken to file unemployment compensation claims to take up the slack. But there was a big question whether the states would approve the claims, because so many states do not approve claims where loss of employment is caused by action of the claimant, himself — such as might be ruled to be the case in the voluntary walkout of the miners.

Meanwhile most miners' families prepared for a slim Easter. There would be little money to buy new bonnets or dresses.

Bottoms Up!



Attorney Carl J. Stephens of the Iowa farm bureau takes a swig of hog cholera virus in house of representatives in attempt to show virus was not dangerous to humans. A veterinarian declared Stephens, after drinking the virus, might be a cholera carrier for at least 19 days.

RENT CONTROL:

Home Rule Favored

The administration's legislative program was bogging down at every turn in congress.

Rent controls, vital to millions of Americans, were being prolonged, but not along lines desired by President Truman and his advisers.

THE HOUSE had passed a rent control measure, but fixed extension at 15 months, instead of the 24 the administration wanted, and provided for home-rule application, a factor opposed by the administration.

If the senate accepted this version of a rent control act, it would be well for all concerned in the nation to begin ascertaining views of their local rent control boards, for that's where authority to relax or continue rent controls would rest.

The bill, passed by a vote of 261 to 153 is now in the hands of the senate for action and administration forces are reported ready to renew their fight for more adequate rent curbs there. Action on a senate version of rent controls had been blocked by the filibuster.

CONCERNING local-option authority to do away with rent controls, Tighe Wood, federal rent administrator, expressed the opinion it might not work out too badly. He went as far as to say that "I would be willing to bet that 90 per cent of the 1,100 counties where we have rent control will not lift rent control under this amendment."

Many Americans would wonder about that, and hope the housing chief was correct in his views. If he were wrong, and the senate enacted the house bill as drawn, a grave housing emergency might be created overnight.

Wood, however, saw two essentials lacking in the house bill. He termed these as criminal penalties for landlords overcharging on rent, and authority to recontrol apartments in residential hotels.

STAFF OF LIFE:

Cost Probe Due

The housewife who had read that the price of wheat and flour had gone down, but who found bread prices remaining up, had company if she had begun to puzzle about the paradox.

The senate of the United States was becoming interested, too, in this situation. And, a broad senate investigation into prices of bread—along with other things — was "ready to go," according to Senator Maybank (D., S.C.).

AS CHAIRMAN of the senate banking committee, he called on government agencies for latest data on prices—especially the spread between prices consumers pay and those farmers get for their products.

The chairman said the price investigation wants to know:

Why are bread prices at their level in view of the wheat and flour price drops?

Why hasn't lard, soap and shortening prices fallen off more?

American housewives also would like to have answers to those questions.

"BIOLOGICAL WARFARE" BUGABOO

Germs as Weapons Potent but Exaggerated

James Forrestal, retiring secretary of defense, has broken an official three-year military silence on the use or discussion of the term "biological warfare" and in a formal statement characterized much that has been written about the potency of germ weapons as "exaggerated, fantastic or unduly spectacular."

Forrestal advised the public that "it would be folly to underestimate the potentialities of biological warfare" and he disclosed that research had shown that "germs or their poisonous products could be used effectively as weapons of war." At the same time he denied the existence of any "biological super-weapon." The secretary's statement ended a secrecy curb.

Sulfas Cause Egg Slump—but

The American Veterinary Medical association warns poultrymen against reaching for the sulfa bottle too frequently.

In a recent experiment, the production of 671 birds given sulfa for periods of from three to six days dropped 50 per cent; and, compared with a control group of 430, it took the sulfa-treated hens a month to reach a rate of production equaling that of the untreated hens.

The association points out, however, that this argument is not against the use of sulfa drugs when needed, but rather a note of warning against their overuse.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS ... by Lynn Chambers

Speed your Cooking with Pressure Pans
(See Recipes Below)

Quick Meals

IF YOU'VE EVER come home at five o'clock after an afternoon of club activities, have you wondered how to get a roast on the table and a meal cooked to completion within the hour?

The solution to this problem lies in cooking the meal in one of those efficient utensils known as a pressure cooker or pressure pan. In an hour, and in many cases, less time, you can have a steaming hot meal with meat, vegetables and potatoes on the table for a hungry family. All this can be accomplished with no more previous preparation than marketing.

SPECIAL TODAY CHUCK ROAST

Foods cooked under pressure cook quickly because the steam is held within the utensil. Food values are saved, too, so you can serve more healthful meals to the family. And, if you're a busy homemaker, you can save hours of time in the preparation of foods which usually take three of four hours to cook.

All of the recipes given today use meats that take long cooking time under ordinary circumstances. Use the directions carefully and follow the manufacturers' directions for using whatever kind of cooker you have.

* * *

THE RECOMMENDED pressure for most dishes including meats is 15 pounds. Study your cooker to see how this is obtained and maintained.

* * *

(Serves 4)

- 1½ pounds ham shank
- 1 cup water
- 4 small potatoes, peeled and halved
- 4 small onions, peeled
- 1 small turnip, peeled and sliced
- 4 medium carrots, scraped
- 1 small cabbage, quartered
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper

Place ham and water in cooker. Adjust cover, exhaust air and bring pressure to 15 pounds. Cook for 20 minutes. Reduce pressure and open cooker. Add prepared vegetables and pepper. Adjust cover, exhaust air and bring pressure again to 15 pounds. Cook for five to eight minutes, depending upon size of vegetables. Cool and open cooker and serve at once.

CANNED TOMATO sauce added to a pot roast gives you a wonderfully rich but economical gravy, as in the following recipe:

Savory Pot Roast
(Serves 6-10)

- 1 clove garlic
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 2 tablespoons drippings
- 1 (8-ounce) can tomato sauce
- 2 tablespoons cornstarch
- ¼ cup cold water

Rub the cut surface of the meat with cut surface of garlic clove. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Brown in the pressure cooker in the drippings. Add canned tomato sauce. Close cooker and exhaust air. Bring pressure to 15 pounds and cook 11 minutes to the pound.

DOES THE FAMILY like meltingly delicious spaghetti? Here's the easy way to cook it.

Spaghetti with Meat Sauce
(Serves 6)

- 2 tablespoons salad oil
- 1 pound ground beef
- 1 clove garlic, chopped
- 1 No. 2 can tomatoes
- 1 (8-ounce) can tomato sauce
- 2 medium onions, chopped
- 1 teaspoon chili powder
- 1 green pepper, chopped
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 (8-ounce) package spaghetti
- Parmesan cheese

Combine all ingredients except cheese in pressure pan. Adjust cover and exhaust air. Bring to 15 pounds pressure and cook for 12 - 15 minutes. Serve over cooked spaghetti, topped with cheese.

Wiener Schnitzel
(Serves 6)

- 2 slices veal round, cut ½-inch thick
- 4 tablespoons flour
- Salt and pepper
- 1 teaspoon paprika
- 1 cup sliced onions
- ½ lemon, sliced thin
- 1 cup soured cream

Cut veal into serving size pieces and dredge in flour mixed with salt and pepper. Heat cooker, add oil and paprika. Brown pieces of veal on both sides. Add onion and saute slightly. Place a slice of lemon on each piece of veal. Add sour cream. Adjust cover, exhaust air and bring to 15 pounds pressure. Cook 15 minutes. Cool cooker and serve veal, garnished with parsley.

LYNN SAYS:
Pressure Cookers Have Many Uses

It's amazingly quick to make custards in the pressure cooker. Simply pour the custard mixture into small, heat-proof cups and set on the pressure cooker rack with a little water at the bottom. Cook for 2 minutes at 15 pounds pressure.

Molds are now available for puddings that fit right into pressure pans. They steam puddings perfectly and swiftly.

The pressure pan may be used just as any other kettle for sauces, dressings, etc. without the cover.

If you want to cook several different kinds of vegetables at the same time in a pressure pan, select those which require the same cooking time.

To soften cereals properly and to bring out their full flavor, use the pressure pan. It saves time.

Many of the pressure pans can be used for processing fruit and vegetables for canning. Follow directions.

Colonial Laws Launched Public School Systems

The Massachusetts' school law of 1642, which declared that all children should be taught to read, was unprecedented in the English-speaking world.

At first, the colonial school system was — traditionally — voluntary and subordinate to the church. When it became apparent that voluntary efforts could not guarantee general education, the general court enacted the law of 1642.

In 1647, the Massachusetts' general court set another precedent by ordering a school system established and maintained, fixing the tradition by which educational facilities are provided to enable the state to better enforce the educational obligation it imposes upon parents.

IT'S SIMPLE! Here's how...

Dictators always lay down the law to the people. Their henchmen interpret it. Thus, they hold themselves above the law. In America, we believe that all government must be kept under law.

The lawyers of Minnesota invite you to write a statement of not more than 50 words on the subject:

"Why Freedom Depends on Government Under Law."

Send your statement to: Minnesota State Bar Contest, 1200 Second Ave. So., Minneapolis. A jury of distinguished men will pick the best statement written by a boy and the best one written by a girl. If your statement is selected, you will be taken on a five-day trip to the nation's capital, with all expenses paid. You will meet important national leaders and see historic scenes you will never forget. The trip will be made early in June. The girl's mother or teacher will be invited to go along, with all expenses paid.

Contest Rules are Simple: To be eligible for the free trip, you must live in Minnesota, be a student not above the 12th grade in school and you must not be a member of the immediate family of a judge or lawyer. You may enter as many statements as you like and you may talk over your statements with your parents and teachers.

Write "Boy" or "Girl" in one corner of your entry.

Winners will be chosen chiefly on the basis of thought but neatness, spelling, grammar and promptness in entering the contest will also be considered. So enter NOW.

All entries, to be judged, must be in by or postmarked not later than midnight, April 30, 1949.

An exciting new quiz game will be sent free to everyone who enters.

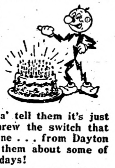
Otter Tales

By... Reddy Kilowatt

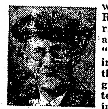
A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota



The other day I visited my grand-daddy, Eager-Beaver Kilowatt. (He's retired now — just takes care of the electric lights in the Old Folks' Home.) We were sittin' playin' a game of 7200-volt Hot-Spark, when he says: "Reddy, me boy, did you know April is the 40th anniversary of the Otter Tail Power Company?" I shook my head.

"Well, alternate my current and call me a transformer!" says grand-dad. "You oughta' tell folks about things like that! You oughta' tell them it's just forty years since Mr. Vernon A. Wright threw the switch that energized the first Otter Tail transmission line . . . from Dayton Hollow to Wahpeton. And you oughta' tell them about some of the old-timers who were on the job in those days!

"For instance," continued grand-dad Kilowatt, "our oldest living employee was a man we all loved and respected — Ben Snyder — who passed away March 13 at the age of 82. Retired since 1947, good old Ben was full of pep right to the last. He and I went through quite an experience together forty years ago.



BEN SNYDER

"It was 4:30 one morning in the electric generating plant run by the city of Fergus Falls on the Otter Tail river. Ben was checking various gauges, when all of a sudden there was a terrific roar. CRASH! BANG! WH-O-O-M! We just escaped in time; in a minute the whole dam went out and the building collapsed in a heap of dust. That was in September 1909, and Ben went to work for the Otter Tail Power Company shortly after.

"Never will forget the spring of 1912, either. That's when Anna Hess went to work in our Wahpeton office, where you'll still see her right today. She's been with Otter Tail for 37 years, which makes her the oldest living employee in point of service. Why, shucks, Ann can tell you how in those days there weren't even meters. She had to count the number of lamps in a home to figure the electric bill!"

"Yep, and we can't forget those other old-timers, either — like Phil Van Buren, now a dispatcher at Hoot Lake; and R. W. Davidson, better known as "Curly," local superintendent at Chokio, and his brother George, District Manager at Morris, who is also the mayor. They were all in it at the beginning—inspired by Mr. Wright who figured the whole thing out."

"But," said grand-dad, "some other pretty important people were involved, too. They're the people who buy electricity. Whatever the Otter Tail Power Company has done in 40 years, to bring more comforts to more people, is chiefly due to the support and encouragement of thousands of Otter Tail Power Company customers."

Wish I could tell you more of Eager-Beaver's story, but I want to get in this little note: If you like LOTS of HOT WATER . . . for washing dishes, washing clothes, bathing and shaving . . . get an electric water heater. Better get one that's large enough, either 80, 90, 100 or 120-gallon size. Remember, I work cheaper heating water from midnight until 7 A. M. And a time switch on your meter automatically puts me to work during those hours. Be sure to read this little column next month. I want to tell you about the Otter Tail "hot stick" crews.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Ignores Program Setback, Insists Congress Is Cooperating; Approval Seen for Vets' Pension

PRESIDENCY:

'Say It Isn't So'

Was President Truman emulating the ostrich with the old "head in the sand" technique, or was he naive enough to believe what he was saying?

This seemed a fair question when Mr. Truman, despite multiple setbacks in congress for his legislative program, declared he and the congress were cooperating and that only "troublemakers" talked of bad feelings between them.

MR. TRUMAN had suffered three major setbacks in attempting to have his campaign pledges enacted into law. He had been blocked on rent controls, appointment of Mon C. Walgren as a key figure in the national defense setup, and civil rights proposals.

But, the President shook off these reverses by ignoring them in a speech to the United States conference of mayors in Washington.

Instead, he told the mayors:

"Of course I differ with the congress on some points and where these differences are important I shall continue to urge the course I think is right.

"BUT, BASICALLY, the congress and the President are working together and will continue to work together for the good of the whole country. We are going to agree on a lot more things than we disagree on."

Many observers took the view that the President's remarks indicated adoption of new strategy in dealing with congress—that an attitude of "soft words" might be held more advisable than angry denunciations of the lawmakers.

PENSIONS:

Who Pays?

It was beginning to appear that a veteran's pension bill in some form would be enacted by the 81st congress. Prodded by Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.), of the house veteran's affairs committee, the measure under consideration would give veterans of World Wars I and II automatic pensions of $90 a month at age 65. Budget bureau experts contend this would cost the nation upwards of 125 billion dollars over the next 50 years.

WHO WOULD PAY the cost of the pensions? American taxpayers, of course, and among these would be all the veterans who might some day receive the bonus. As one young war veteran put it, "By the time I reached 65, I would have gone broke trying to pay taxes to grant me a pension."

That's the viewpoint of some veterans. There are many others who honestly feel they are entitled to a pension and would readily accept an "installment" tax payment period between their present age and age 65 in order to get the pension.

SOME OPPONENTS of the pension measure favored restricting pensions only to veterans of World War I, but it was obvious no such proposal as this would be enacted. There were too many World War II veterans who would oppose that simply on the principle of discrimination, no matter how they might feel basically about the pension proposal.

On the first test of the measure, it was almost lost, but swift parliamentary maneuvering saved it from being returned to committee where it might have died a natural death.

DRAFT:

Easing Off

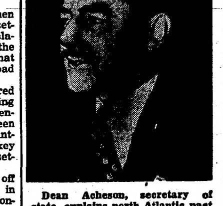
Military draft eligibles could relax — Maj. Gen. John E. Dahlquist, army personnel chief, said no more men will be inducted into the army before July, 1950; and that's when the present peacetime draft act expires.

SO, IT SEEMED that the peacetime draft was virtually over, except for the possibility of enactment of a new act or extension by congress of the present law.

However, the national defense establishment hastened to state that General Dahlquist was giving only his opinion — that no draft policy has been laid down, and that no one knows what the future holds.

IT WAS REGARDED as significant that there have been no inductions under the present law since the end of January because voluntary enlistments have filled quotas, and army officials have said that budget reductions forced them to cut their proposed strength.

Explains Pact



Dean Acheson, secretary of state, explains north Atlantic pact at special press conference at the state department.

PACT:

Reds Burn

The Kremlin and its satellites were literally burned up over the north Atlantic treaty alliance.

To the Russians the pact was a "deceptive instrument of war aimed against them.

THE CONTROLLED Russian press and radio joined in the clamor, branding the pact as the work of war-mongers trying to wreck the United Nations.

The general theme was that the alliance was the "main weapon of the aggressive policy of the ruling circles of the United States, Britain and France.

The Russian stew was understandable. By this diplomatic coup western powers had managed to abate somewhat the legend of Soviet invincibility among the smaller countries and at the same time to serve notice on the Russians that any further violence or aggression within the pact area would mean war.

THE TERMS OF the pact do not actually say that: but they say something which is the same. That is that pact nations shall construe an attack on any member as an attack upon them all, and even the dumbest Muscovite could understand what that meant.

The treaty, however, was not without its cries at home. John Foster Dulles, slated to be secretary of state had Dewey nabbed the presidency, was anything but enthusiastic about the alliance. In fact, Dulles observations on the subject were such as to raise the ire of Dean Acheson, secretary of state, who charged that Dulles was put out because he, Dulles, couldn't get over Dewey's defeat and how he might have been secretary of state himself but for that.

RENT CURBS:

Outlook Dim

Overriding administration recommendations, the senate voted to let town and city governments abolish rent controls in their areas—if the state governors approve.

THERE WERE MANY who would discern instantly the political implication inherent in such a move. In states where governors are permitted under law to succeed themselves—and even in states which do not permit this—governors are usually concerned with re-election or with naming their successors. Abolition of rent control power could be used as a potent weapon with which to beat recalcitrant voters into line.

As anyone familiar with legislative processes knows, organizations are always the most powerful and effective lobbyists. Landlords have a national organization which already has been vociferously vocal at Washington. There has been no organization of renters and tenants, not even at the state or county level. Those who are heard in law-making assemblies are those who are organized and who know how to obtain hearings. And these organizations usually manage to do rather well for themselves.

IN WHATEVER FORM the bill finally emerges from the senate, it must go to a conference committee in order to iron out differences between house and senate versions.

States righters would herald the local option features of the control bill with elation and landlord groups would find it easier to attempt legislative pressure in their own back yards.

MEMORY:

Ours Is Short

To many who had experienced the horrors of war and who had met German foemen in battle, American policy in Germany was almost maddening. Official approval of selection of a group of ex-Nazis to manage the Ruhr—Germany's greatest war-making potential—was bringing cries of protest from all over the nation.

The grasp of the ex-Hitlerites was reaching farther and farther into Germany's vital affairs and the optimism of the group that their desires would be fulfilled was significant.

Latest manifestation of the trend was a statement by Hans Thomsen, who was the Nazis' last charge d'affaires in Washington, that he and other veteran Hitler diplomats expected to resume their careers in the "new Germany."

There was no lack of cockiness in Thomsen's stand. Said he: "The new German government cannot get along without the old Wilhelmstrasse men—who know their business." He is now in the banking business in Hamburg.

The old pattern was becoming increasingly clear. Smart diplomats, seeking a rampart against communism, were using this same objective to re-create Germany as a European power—a buffer against the Reds.

SWALLOWS:

Unfailing Legend

The old, old legend was unfailing. Always the swallows had come back to Capistrano, and this time they came again.

THE LEGEND was fulfilled to the day. Through the long, lazy centuries that the birds have always been coming back to San Juan Capistrano, their return has always been on the same day each year—St. Joseph's day.

And this year there was no deviation. On St. Joseph's day the birds came sweeping back at dawn to fly into their homes under the eaves of the historic old mission.

"They do not come in huge swarms as some reports have it." an old padre said. "Instead they arrive in small contingents, 50 to 75 at a time."

Father Hutchinson, pastor, said that the birds usually leave in July after their young can fly. They travel to nearby canyons to feed where insects are plentiful, he indicated.

BOGEY MAN:

Solons Defiant

Figuratively thumbing its collective nose at the "big man" the United States senate by a vote of 50 to 11 confirmed the appointment of Dr. James Boyd as director of the federal bureau of mines.

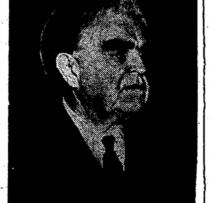
THE "BIG MAN" was John L. Lewis, leader of the United Mine Workers of America, and he wanted no part of Dr. Boyd in the federal mine regulation setup.

The senate action came while Lewis had the pressure on. Lewis' miners were in the second week of a 14-day shutdown ordered by Lewis who termed the stoppage a "memorial" to miners killed and injured last year.

Chief speculation concerned the import of the senate action. Did it mean that government, finally, was ready to clamp down on the dictatorial Lewis and abolish his power as a continuing threat to American industry?

It could mean that, if Lewis' mine stoppage resulted in a reversal of labor sentiment among some members of congress and a really "get-tough" labor law were to be enacted.

What Next?



Coal operators and coal consumers were wondering what would be the next move in John L. Lewis' campaign strategy. Lewis, above, had called the miners out in a two-week stoppage which he described as a "memorial" to miners killed and hurt in 1948.

INSIDE 'SHORT' STORY

'Boss' Censored President's Swim Photos

Whatever else the incident of the censorship of pictures showing Harry S. Truman swimming in Florida may have done, it put him solid with most American males whose choice of pastime is so frequently influenced by the distaff side at home.

For, at least, the secret of the confiscated photographs was out—and the gentleman who broke the "inside story" was none other than Mr. Truman himself.

It wasn't censorship at all, the President said, which caused presidential party attaches to seize photos taken of Mr. Truman while he was swimming. It was just that Mrs. Bess Truman doesn't want her husband traipsin' around clad only in bathing trunks, and Harry S. Truman jolly well knows it.

Burglar Irked

In Champaign, Ill., Carl Fletcher, 23, was so irked at finding nothing worth stealing after housebreaking that he called police and reported his own burglary.

Fletcher broke into a filling station, then telephoned the sheriff and police to "come get" him. He waited for them and unlocked the door to let them in. "I just got mad," he said, "at finding nothing worth taking."

DDT Increases Yield Of Clover Seed

William Meinholz of Dane county, Wisconsin, increased his yield of Ladino seed by one-third when he dusted it with 40 pounds of 5 per cent DDT per acre. Meinholz reports dusting gave better results than spraying (one pound DDT in 100 gallons of water per acre), while Henry Perry, Jefferson county, reported an increased seed yield of 76 per cent in red clover with the use of the spray.

THERE'S NOTHING FANCY about ice cream and cake, but they make a wonderful dessert for any occasion, plain or fancy. Then, too, there are few who can resist turning down a heaping bowl of creamy ice cream and a slice of feather-like cake, so you have no worry about pleasing family or guests.

For youngsters who have difficulty getting their daily quota of milk and other dairy foods, ice cream is the perfect answer. The same is true, too, of adults who cannot drink their pint of milk.

Ice cream is a highly nutritious dairy food that furnishes energy as well as minerals such as calcium and phosphorus. It also gives significant amounts of vitamins A and B2 and quality protein, all of which are needed for proper growth, strong muscles, bones and teeth.

You don't need to do anything special to make a festive dessert out of ice cream. Simply pile it in a glass bowl for easy serving and to get the full benefit of its luscious appearance. Around the bowl you may have bought or homemade cupcakes or several bowls of assorted jellies, jams or sauces for make-your-own sundaes.

A large serving bowl of ice cream surrounded with luscious fudge cup cakes topped with swirls of chocolate frosting and pecan halves make a gala dessert for a festive occasion. Pass this with assorted sauces or jams and jellies for sundaes.

HERE ARE SOME delicious cupcakes which you may want to serve:

Fudge Cupcakes
(Makes 12 cakes)
- 2 squares unsweetened chocolate
- ¼ cup sugar
- 2 tablespoons milk
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- ¼ cup butter
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 egg
- 1½ cups sifted cake flour
- 1½ teaspoon baking powder
- ¼ teaspoon baking soda
- ¼ teaspoon salt

Melt chocolate over hot water, add one-fourth cup sugar and two tablespoons milk; stir until very smooth. Add vanilla and remove from heat.

Work butter and sugar to a soft cream, add egg and beat hard until blended. Stir in milk, then the flour mixed and sifted with the other dry ingredients. When mixed, stir in chocolate mixture and pour into buttered cupcake pans. Bake in a moderate (375°) oven for about 25 minutes. Cool and cover tops with:

Apple-Raisin Sauce
(For Ice Cream)
- 2 cups sweetened, strained apple sauce
- ½ teaspoon cinnamon
- ½ cup seedless raisins
- 1 tablespoon orange marmalade

Mix apple sauce with all other ingredients and heat slowly to the boiling point. Simmer 10 minutes over a slow fire or until raisins are plump. Cool before serving.

Coffee Cream Sauce
(For Ice Cream)
- 1 cup light brown sugar
- 1 tablespoon instant powdered coffee
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1 teaspoon cornstarch
- ½ cup coffee cream

Mix sugar with cornstarch, coffee and salt. Add butter and cream and stir over a slow fire until boiling. Boil for one minute, remove from fire and cool slightly. Add one teaspoon vanilla. Serve cold.

Another delicious way to serve ice cream and cake is to arrange two slices of spice cake for a serving. Place a portion of ice cream in the center and top with fruit sauce, an apple-raisin sauce, as given below, or crushed pineapple, pineapple and ginger or mincemeat sauce.

Chocolate Frosting
- 2 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
- 2 tablespoons hot milk
- 1½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar (about)
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- pecan nut meats

Melt chocolate over hot water, add hot milk, sugar and vanilla to make a thick frosting. Beat vigorously to make it creamy and more sugar, if necessary, to make frosting spread easily, without running.

Coffee flavor goes beautifully with vanilla ice cream. If you like a sauce, here's just the one:

HERE ARE SOME excellent uses for leftover cake that are served with ice cream. A bit of dressing makes them glamorous desserts.

Quick Alaskas
(Serves 6)
- 6 leftover cup cakes
- 3 egg whites
- 6 tablespoons granulated sugar
- 1 teaspoon lemon juice
- 1 quart vanilla ice cream

Cut the centers from the cakes, leaving a wide center to hold the ice cream. Save the cake centers for another dessert. Beat the egg whites until stiff enough to hold peaks. Fold in sugar, one tablespoon at a time, then lemon juice. Just before serving, place the cakes on a bread board, fill centers with ice cream and cover the ice cream and all the outside of the cake with a thick layer of meringue. Bake in a moderate (375°) oven for five minutes and serve immediately.

Leftover cake is easily glamorized if served in this way: place two thin slices of the cake on a plate, center with ice fruit sauce like apple-raisin, cream and top with a spicy given in this column.

Ice Cream Trifle
- 3 cups crumbled spice, pound or sponge cake
- 1 cup orange juice
- 1 cup chilled pineapple juice
- Ice cream
- ¼ cup chopped nuts

Place cake crumbs in a large serving bowl and pour mixed fruit juices over them. Let stand for at least one-half hour. Fill bowl with small scoops of ice cream, then sprinkle with chopped nuts.

LYNN SAYS:
Make the Most
Of your Meats

When you roast beef or lamb, cut small slits in the fat of the slivers of garlic. This adds a lot of flavor to the meat that many like. Remove garlic before serving.

Honey mixed with orange juice and grated orange rind may be poured over the scored fat of ham for interesting flavor.

Sauteed mushrooms may be added to beef gravy to provide interesting flavor.

Leftover beef, like lamb may be curried and served on hot, fluffy rice.

If hamburgers tend to look skimpy, place a thick slice of cheese on them before broiling.

Add drained horseradish to medium white sauce if you want to bring out delicious beef flavor in a boiled cut of the meat.

Minced scallions and parsley may be added to melted butter to bring out the full flavor of chicken, steaks or chops, which have been broiled.

Plenty of Room For a Subdivision

Conceivably, a man could build a house and have his bedroom in New Mexico, his bathroom in Arizona, his kitchen in Colorado, and his living room in Utah.

The only drawback to such a plan is the fact that this would-be site—the common meeting point of Utah, Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico—is quite inaccessible to the ordinary traveler since it is deep in Indian territory, miles from human inhabitants, and used for winter grazing land.

Surveyed by a surveyor named E. N. Darling in 1868, the four-state boundary is at the intersection of the 37th parallel of north latitude and the 109th meridian of west longitude.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE
by Roger C. Whitman

Question: My new plastic tablecloth has made the ends of the breakfast table sticky. How can this be removed from a varnished birch finish and not ruin the finish?

Answer: Try wiping the sticky places very lightly with benzine; being careful not to press hard on the finish. Be careful of fire, and close the door leading to the kitchen. If the table is in the kitchen, do not work there. If the benzine dulls the finish, apply a thin coat of paste wax, let it dry and then polish with a soft cloth.

Question: Can anything be done to stop the radio interference caused by our oil furnace? Some say to ground the furnace. Our furnace is on the main floor as we have no basement.

Answer: Radio interference from oil burners, motors and other electrical equipment can be eliminated, but this calls for the service of an expert electrician or radio serviceman. The manufacturer of your oil burner might be able to take care of the nuisance.

LOOKING AHEAD

An Enterprise Story

Freedom of enterprise is a strong and dynamic principle. It continues to work us wonders despite the many ways we have hedged it about. The sorry plight of our time is that we have found such a fine way of life, proved that it works so well, then cared so little to protect and cherish it. Yes, a lot of us pay first-rate lip service to free enterprise.

But when it's time for the crucial test, what happens? We let the politicians (who ought to become statesmen when elected) spread the death-web of bureaucracy far and wide. We seem to agree that government can do it—oh, just almost anything—so much better! We tax industry and incomes until capital is too scared to have any enterprise left. In short, we back enterprise right up to the precipice, and seem not to realize what we have done.

50,000 Lives

I have said that free enterprise still works us wonders. One of the most amazing examples of freedom of business enterprise has been working miracles right before our eyes now for five years, and we have sarcely noticed it. One of the nation's top science writers, J. D. Ratcliff, has outlined the miracle-story of penicillin manufacture in the January issue of "Nations Business." Ratcliff says this great medicine is now the biggest selling item in the drug trade, saving 50,000 lives yearly from pneumonia alone.

Just a few short years ago penicillin was made in laboratory flasks and sold for a fancy price. But, then, American industry tackled the job of producing penicillin. At first the quoted market price was $20 per 100,000 units, but today a dollar's worth of penicillin will rout dreaded pneumonia.

Courage and Vision

How did all this happen? Well, it took enterprise and lots of it. Penicillin manufacture was pretty much a guessing game—at first. It took courage to invest and to plan. According to Ratcliff, one small company in the chemical industry had this courage and vision.

It seems that a man named John L. Smith, president of Charles Pfizer & Company, Brooklyn, gets the main honors for penicillin manufacture. Smith was an immigrant to this country at the age of two years, and worked his way up to an education in chemistry. After he became president of that small firm, specialists in microbes and fermentation processes, Smith heard of penicillin. Then Smith took a chance, made possible by America's system of enterprise.

A Real Test

This man Smith made plans to spend 4½ million dollars for a giant new penicillin plant. That was big money, for his company was doing only about twice that amount of business annually. Besides, science was not certain about what penicillin could do. But Smith had seen it save lives, and he intended to produce it. He did, in vats as large as tank cars. The demand was great. Then others began to make it. Still, the Pfizer company's sales jumped to 50 million dollars a year. The country had its precious penicillin.

This is a grand success story. But it is not a new one. The same kind of story has been repeated countless times in the building of America. Freedom of enterprise has helped make our land into a land of plenty. It would be well if we should test every bill in Congress, every national policy, with the question: will it encourage, or will it hinder, private enterprise?

Two of many Great Northern "firsts" are represented in the picture above. At the top is the William Crooks, first locomotive in Minnesota, which made its initial run between St. Paul and Minneapolis on June 28, 1862. Below is the modern Empire Builder, first streamlined passenger train between Chicago and Seattle. Dependent on income from transportation services and private investments to buy equipment and maintain tracks and other facilities, the railways are the nation's only common carriers which wholly pay their own way.

THE SECOND HUNDRED YEARS

The observance this year of Minnesota's Territorial Centennial prompts serious meditation on and gratitude for the wisdom, courage and vision of those who championed the territorial cause, and those who later gave leadership to the building of a great state.

Early in the forefront of those pioneer leaders was James J. Hill, destined to become the commanding and most constructive railway genius of his age. He laid the foundation of empire building in St. Paul in 1856—two years before Minnesota attained statehood—and at his death in 1916 the transformation of the vast, fertile country between Lake Superior and Puget Sound into a rich, productive empire was nearing the zenith.

Although best remembered as the builder of Great Northern Railway, which he pushed from the Minnesota-North Dakota border to the Pacific without government land grants, James J. Hill also wrote an indelible chapter in American agricultural history. He championed diversification, introduced the first purebred livestock into the Northwest, established experimental farms and encouraged soil conservation through crop rotation.

Mr. Hill established Great Northern as an implement of land settlement and agricultural and industrial development.

He expected it to be profitable to patrons through transportation services, to those whose large and small investments financed construction, and to provide sufficient capital for maintenance, improvements and equipment. He advocated regulation of railways through fair laws, but did not expect or seek government subsidies for building, maintaining or advancing Great Northern's welfare — a continuing policy of the transportation system Mr. Hill founded.

How James J. Hill would have viewed some of today's widely-held, politically-inspired concepts and theories of economics—dependence on state rather than individual initiative, government ownership, etc.—can only be conjectured. However, in 1907, when politicians were blaming American industry and business for the nation's economic ills of the day, Mr. Hill said in an address in Kansas City: "It is time for the whole country to sober down and think out the problems before it. They are serious enough to call for its best and most earnest effort. They are vital enough to engage the most generous patriotism."

Words deserving of consideration and thought at the beginning of Minnesota's second hundred years!

Plans for the 1949 Cancer Fund campaign in Marhall county have been formulated and are now being put into effect.

The Warren Junior Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring the drive throughout the county and has made Victor Aalbu and Kingsley Dyer co-chairmen of the project. These men received their appointments from the Minnesota Division of the American Cancer Society, and have established the campaign headquarters at the Holbrook Agency in Warren.

City chairmen have been appointed in all the cities and towns in the county as well as the townships. The county chairmen will get their campaign advertising out to them this week. It is expected that these local chairmen will put forth concerted effort to finish up the campaign by the end of April or first week in May.

Announcement has just been made that a total of $200,000 of a $300,000 pledge has been paid for the financing of two floors in the proposed research center at the University of Minnesota devoted to cancer. This money is contributed by the people for the control of cancer. More money is needed to pay up this pledge and to carry on the work in research centers already established by these funds all over the nation.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

There'll Always Be a "Gawker"

"Harry the Hermit," as he's called, came into town last week and, as usual, caused quite a stir. He looks like a cross between Santa Claus and Daniel Boone.

We had a friendly glass of beer together and I asks him, "Don't you ever get annoyed at the way some people laugh and stare as you go by?" "Shucks no," Harry says. "Only while they're laughin' at me, I'm feelin' a mite sorry for them. Imagine—folks so ungrown-up they can't see I'm really just the same as they are underneath."

From where I sit, Harry's a lot more "civilized" than the people who make fun of him. He's contented, lives the way he believes is right without harming anyone—and what's more, he's tolerant of others whose tastes in living are different from his.

Maybe we all don't look the same, or act the same, or eat or drink the same, but in a free country, why should we?

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Price Reductions Clip Inflation: Rent Control Law Gives Authority To State Governors, Legislatures

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

PRICE DROP:

Hits Inflation

American consumers were asking themselves: What does it mean? Why were prices being slashed, the dollar stretching a little further? Was it simply that inflation was being clipped, or was it true, as some have said, that the country is in the midst of a mild recession?

THOSE QUESTIONS were well-founded. For, in the latest economic development, prices of automobiles, accessories, radios, refrigerators and ranges had been reduced.

Continued reductions in such basic commodities as lead, zinc, copper and steel indicated there might be further cuts in manufactured goods in the wind.

One automobile manufacturer announced cuts ranging from $198 to $333 in the price of his cars. The mid-season catalogue of the nation's biggest mail-order house announced "many price reductions in all lines." Even ice cream was down—off three cents a quart in Philadelphia.

Radios showed the biggest drop. One nationally-known manufacturer announced price cuts of 20 to 50 per cent on nine home model sets. Auto batteries were lower in cost. A refrigerator manufacturer knocked off $20 from some of its models. Steel was down and scrap metal was at the lowest price in almost two years.

WHATEVER ELSE entered into the picture, it was conceded that buyer resistance was one of the main items in the price reductions.

The consumer had become more conscious of prices. There had been more hand-to-mouth buying. There was a tendency to "wait and see" whether prices would come down a bit.

Businessmen and industrialists agreed that the "bloom is off the boom" — that a healthy readjustment is underway.

SPEED PILOT:

A New Record?

Joe De Bona, by his own admission was a "scared boy."

And he had every reason to be. He had taken off from Burbank, Calif., in actor Jimmy Stewart's nine-year old plane—a souped-up F-51—at 9:20:50 one morning, and exactly five hours later he was zooming into the airstrip at New York's La Guardia Field.

THE PLANE had a cracked cockpit canopy, dangerously low oil pressure, no oxygen, and gasoline for only seven more minutes of flying when De Bona whistled into the airport at 600 miles per hour.

"I'll never try a record flight again," he said. "This was too nerve wracking."

Fred H. Wilkerson, official timer of the National Aeronautical association, said the NAA would have to decide whether De Bona set a new cross-country record. He said the plane carried no barograph, a locked instrument which shows elapsed time, and that the gasoline tanks were not sealed.

THE OFFICIAL coast-to-coast record for a single reciprocating plane such as De Bona flew is six hours, seven minutes and five seconds, set by Paul Mantz on February 28, 1947, in a flight averaging 401.076 miles per hour.

DEFENSE CHIEF:

Has Big Job

Louis Johnson of West Virginia had taken on one of the biggest jobs in the world, and had added to the magnitude of the task when he declared the armed services of the United States would be "united as one."

WELL, JOHNSON, in taking over as secretary of defense, was the man whose job it would be to unify the armed services, but his predecessor, James V. Forrestal, retiring to private life as a banker, hadn't been able to do it.

The fact was that jealousy between the services made it practically impossible to implement a congressional act unifying the army, navy and air corps. However, it was said Johnson would come closer to it than anyone else probably could. It was reported he was ready to adopt a "tough" policy to brass hats in all the services and that if unification were possible, he'd bring it about.

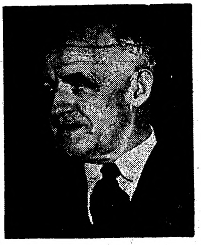
FORRESTAL:

Medal From Harry

James V. Forrestal, retiring secretary of defense, received a surprise when he called at the White House to say goodbye to President Harry S. Truman. Mr. Truman pinned the Distinguished Service Medal on Forrestal's coat.

The citation read that Forrestal had "materially advanced the security of the nation." Forrestal said it was "beyond me" how he merited it.

New Senator



One of the nation's foremost educators, Dr. Frank P. Graham, has been appointed U. S. senator from North Carolina to succeed the late Sen. J. Melville Broughton. Dr. Graham was president of the University of North Carolina.

RENT BILL:

Buck Was Passed

The rent control question was red hot. Congress knew it. The people knew it. But something had to be done before controls expired March 31. Congress had to do something. It did. It passed the buck.

A rent control bill was drafted by the 81st congress, but it laid in the laps of state governors and legislatures the real power and responsibility for rent controls.

EVERYTHING congress wrote into the present bill can be nullified by a governor or a legislature, if they see fit.

The bill continues rent controls for 15 months, or to June 30, 1950. It sets up a "home rule" process for decontrol of states, cities, or other local areas. Legislatures could remove controls throughout a state, or in parts of a state. A city government, or ruling body of other communities, could pass a resolution calling for de-control and, if the state governor approved it, then the federal government would be forced to abolish controls in that community.

The bill requires the housing expediter to fix rents so as to insure landlords a "fair net operating income . . . as far as practicable." However, it restores old OPA powers for the rent expediter to control evictions. This, some congressmen said, would prevent any mass evictions by landlords.

UNDER THE MEASURE, the housing expediter is authorized to sue a landlord for three times the amount of any charge made against a tenant above the legal rent ceiling. Under old law, the tenant had that power, but seldom used it.

The new act does not authorize further 15 per cent "voluntary" increases in rents, and recontrols any dwellings decontrolled under such voluntary leases, at the rent figure contained in such leases.

Veteran's priority for first chance to rent or buy a new property are continued in the bill.

STOCK MARKET:

Curbs Are Relaxed

The federal reserve board had taken an action that should make the "ribbon clerks" very happy.

"Ribbon clerks" is a name applied by stock market operators to amateurs who seek to engage in the fascinating business of trying to make several bucks grow where only one grew originally.

THE FEDERAL reserve board ruling was that the down payment on purchase of stocks would be reduced from 75 per cent to 50 per cent.

The board had been pressured for several months by the New York stock exchange, its president, Emil Schramm, and securities dealers generally. They had complained that the previous restrictions had thrown markets into the doldrums and that trading had remained at an unusually low level for months.

THIS WAS CONSIDERED as strong indication the board believed inflation had ceased to dominate the economic situation.

Earlier, the board had relaxed restrictions on installment-buying credit, giving a longer term for installments on purchases of automobiles, furniture, refrigerators, washing machines and radios.

Open Season

In Kentucky, a wife may swear out legally a search warrant against her husband, according to an opinion given by Assistant Attorney General Squire N. Williams. Whether this extends to hubby's pockets was not mentioned in the ruling.

Williams declared, in an opinion given Harry R. Burke, a Prestonsburg attorney, that he knew of no state statute preventing women taking such actions.

Large Plans for Pete Reiser

By GRANTLAND RICE

A YEAR AGO a hustling second baseman by the name of Eddie Stanky asked the Brooklyn management for an increased stipend or paycheck. Brother Rickey promptly traded him to the Braves and thereby helped move the same Braves into first place.

Grantland Rice

There is now a chance that Branch Rickey is pulling a repeater. He is on his way to being Billy Southworth's "cousin." Some time back. Rickey sold another Dodger star, Pete Reiser, to the same Braves. Reiser is jubilant. So is Southworth.

"I don't think I ever felt better," Reiser told me the other day. "My legs are fine again—and so is my arm. I'm running into no more walls. I'm up to full weight—180 pounds." It might be noted that Reiser was only 30 years of age on St. Patrick's day, sharing this date with Bobby Jones.

Reiser is in his prime. I saw him play third in a recent spring training game and make four beeline throws to first, even rocking the stalwart first baseman, Earl Torgeson. Pete was burning the ball across.

"I have big plans for Reiser," Southworth told me. "I mean if his arm is O.K. I'm not worried about his legs or health. He is not only a fine ballplayer, but a great hitter and a natural competitor. He can help us more than you might think. Pete has known more than his share of raw luck. The tide is about due to turn the other way. If it does, the Braves will look even better than I think they are—and I'm not selling them short.

"Watch that Torgeson at first. He might be the best first baseman in either league this season. Sain and Spahn are my stand-bys, but Vern Bickford has improved sharply and Bill Voiselle will be quite a help. Stanky is again in top condition. His cracked ankle is O.K. I have a fine-looking young catcher in Paul Burris.

"My club is much better than it was last year. It has to be. Every team in our league is stronger. At least most of them are. For example, the Cardinals and Pirates will be better, and the Dodgers, with all their fast kids, is no club you can ever loaf against.

"But I still honestly believe we have enough to win for Boston again. If I didn't think so, I certainly wouldn't say so. But this is going to be a scramble."

* * *

The Most-Improved Team

The most improved team in either league, probably is part of the Philadelphia Story. The Philadelphia Story in baseball has been a rather sad one for some time.

But Connie Mack revived old dreams last season, and not only the veteran Connie but many so-called fairly-smart people believe his Athletics have a pennant chance this new season. Not second—not third—not fourth—but first.

Just as big a story is the chance the Phillies have. They are too young to win any pennant. But smart baseball people tell me they can finish second or third. They probably won't. But they look like a big league ball club on a rampage.

They have a better outfield than either the Braves, Dodgers or the Cardinals in Del Ennis, Richie Ashburn and Bill Nicholson. They have one of the best infields in either league with Eddie Waitkus at first, plus Puddinhead Jones at third. Their catching is only fair.

The Phillies represent the story of the new National league. They can finish second or seventh. They can finish seventh and still be almost as good as the 1949 pennant winner. They deserve support from their fans, for here is not only a good ball club, but an interesting one.

I had a long talk today with my favorite pitcher. His name is Ewell Blackwell of the Reds.

In 1947 Blackwell was far and away the best pitcher in the game—not barring Feller, Newhouser or anyone else. Working for the lowly Reds, he won 16 straight games. He pitched a no-hitter and came close to another in his next start. Working with the Yankees or Dodgers that same year, Blackwell would have won 30 games and lost three or four. He might have won 35 games.

Livestock—Solution To Three 'Problems'

Increased production of livestock will solve the bug-a-boo of surplus grain, aid soil conservation, and create efficiencies which will make possible the profitable sale of more meat and animal products at prices more people can afford to pay.

Moreover, the need for soil conservation is just another argument in favor of more emphasis on animal agriculture, according to H. E. Babcock, one of America's top agricultural leaders.

Grass crops hold and build up the soil, and animal manure adds valuable humus while acting as fertilizer: for example, the rich black soil of Iowa is the result of centuries of grass and grazing buffalo.

"Yes, I know," said the young man he was addressing, "you picked it up; the merchant was impressed by your carefulness, called you back, and made you head of the firm. I have heard of that boy so often."

"No," replied the successful one with a smile. "I saw the pin, picked it up, and sold it. It was a diamond one."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Price Reductions Clip Inflation: Rent Control Law Gives Authority To State Governors, Legislatures

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

PRICE DROP:
Hits Inflation

American consumers were asking themselves: What does it mean? Why were prices being slashed, the dollar stretching a little further? Was it simply that inflation was being clipped, or was it true, as some have said, that the country is in the midst of a mild recession?

THOSE QUESTIONS were well-founded. For, in the latest economic development, prices of automobiles, accessories, radios, refrigerators and ranges had been reduced.

Continued reductions in such basic commodities as lead, zinc, copper and steel indicated there might be further cuts in manufactured goods in the wind.

One automobile manufacturer announced cuts ranging from $198 to $333 in the price of his cars. The mid-season catalogue of the nation's biggest mail-order house announced "many price reductions in all lines." Even ice cream was down—off three cents a quart in Philadelphia.

Radios showed the biggest drop. One nationally-known manufacturer announced price cuts of 20 to 50 per cent on nine home model sets. Auto batteries were lower in cost. A refrigerator manufacturer knocked off $20 from some of its models. Steel was down and scrap metal was at the lowest price in almost two years.

WHATEVER ELSE entered into the picture, it was conceded that buyer resistance was one of the main items in the price reductions.

The consumer had become more conscious of prices. There had been more hand-to-mouth buying. There was a tendency to "wait and see" whether prices would come down a bit.

Businessmen and industrialists agreed that the "bloom is off the boom" — that a healthy readjustment is underway.

SPEED PILOT:
A New Record?

Joe De Bona, by his own admission was a "scared boy."

And he had every reason to be. He had taken off from Burbank, Calif., in actor Jimmy Stewart's nine-year old plane—a souped-up F-51—at 9:20:50 one morning, and exactly five hours later he was zooming into the airstrip at New York's La Guardia Field.

THE PLANE had a cracked cockpit canopy, dangerously low oil pressure, no oxygen, and gasoline for only seven more minutes of flying when De Bona whistled into the airport at 600 miles per hour.

"I'll never try a record flight again," he said. "This was too nerve wracking."

Fred H. Wilkerson, official timer of the National Aeronautical association, said the NAA would have to decide whether De Bona set a new cross-country record. He said the plane carried no barograph, a locked instrument which shows elapsed time, and that the gasoline tanks were not sealed.

THE OFFICIAL coast-to-coast record for a single reciprocating plane such as De Bona flew is six hours, seven minutes and five seconds, set by Paul Mantz on February 28, 1947, in a flight averaging 401.076 miles per hour.

DEFENSE CHIEF:
Has Big Job

Louis Johnson of West Virginia had taken on one of the biggest jobs in the world, and had added to the magnitude of the task when he declared the armed services of the United States would be "united as one."

WELL, JOHNSON, in taking over as secretary of defense, was the man whose job it would be to unify the armed services, but his predecessor, James V. Forrestal, retiring to private life as a banker, hadn't been able to do it.

The fact was that jealousy between the services made it practically impossible to implement a congressional act unifying the army, navy and air corps. However, it was said Johnson would come closer to it than anyone else probably could. It was reported he was ready to adopt a "tough" policy to brass hats in all the services and that if unification were possible, he'd bring it about.

FORRESTAL:
Medal From Harry

James V. Forrestal, retiring secretary of defense, received a surprise when he called at the White House to say goodbye to President Harry S. Truman. Mr. Truman pinned the Distinguished Service Medal on Forrestal's coat.

The citation read that Forrestal had "materially advanced the security of the nation." Forrestal said it was "beyond me" how he merited it.

New Senator

One of the nation's foremost educators, Dr. Frank P. Graham, has been appointed U. S. senator from North Carolina to succeed the late Sen. J. Melville Broughton. Dr. Graham was president of the University of North Carolina.

RENT BILL:
Buck Was Passed

The rent control question was red hot. Congress knew it. The people knew it. But something had to be done before controls expired March 31. Congress had to do something. It did. It passed the buck.

A rent control bill was drafted by the 81st congress, but it laid in the laps of state governors and legislatures the real power and responsibility for rent controls.

EVERYTHING congress wrote into the present bill can be nullified by a governor or a legislature, if they see fit.

The bill continues rent controls for 15 months, or to June 30, 1950. It sets up a "home rule" process for decontrol of states, cities, or other local areas. Legislatures could remove controls throughout a state, or in parts of a state. A city government, or ruling body of other communities, could pass a resolution calling for de-control and, if the state governor approved it, then the federal government would be forced to abolish controls in that community.

The bill requires the housing expediter to fix rents so as to insure landlords a "fair net operating income . . . as far as practicable." However, it restores old OPA powers for the rent expediter to control evictions. This, some congressmen said, would prevent any mass evictions by landlords.

UNDER THE MEASURE, the housing expediter is authorized to sue a landlord for three times the amount of any charge made against a tenant above the legal rent ceiling. Under old law, the tenant had that power, but seldom used it.

The new act does not authorize further 15 per cent "voluntary" increases in rents, and recontrols any dwellings decontrolled under such voluntary leases, at the rent figure contained in such leases.

Veteran's priority for first chance to rent or buy a new property are continued in the bill.

STOCK MARKET:
Curbs Are Relaxed

The federal reserve board had taken an action that should make the "ribbon clerks" very happy.

"Ribbon clerks" is a name applied by stock market operators to amateurs who seek to engage in the fascinating business of trying to make several bucks grow where only one grew originally.

THE FEDERAL reserve board ruling was that the down payment on purchase of stocks would be reduced from 75 per cent to 50 per cent.

The board had been pressured for several months by the New York stock exchange, its president, Emil Schramm, and securities dealers generally. They had complained that the previous restrictions had thrown markets into the doldrums and that trading had remained at an unusually low level for months.

THIS WAS CONSIDERED as strong indication the board believed inflation had ceased to dominate the economic situation.

Earlier, the board had relaxed restrictions on installment-buying credit, giving a longer term for installments on purchases of automobiles, furniture, refrigerators, washing machines and radios.

Open Season

In Kentucky, a wife may swear out legally a search warrant against her husband, according to an opinion given by Assistant Attorney General Squire N. Williams. Whether this extends to hubby's pockets was not mentioned in the ruling.

Williams declared, in an opinion given Harry R. Burke, a Prestonsburg attorney, that he knew of no state statute preventing women taking such actions.

Large Plans for Pete Reiser

By GRANTLAND RICE

A YEAR AGO a hustling second baseman by the name of Eddie Stanky asked the Brooklyn management for an increased stipend or paycheck. Brother Rickey promptly traded him to the Braves and thereby helped move the same Braves into first place.

Grantland Rice

There is now a chance that Branch Rickey is pulling a repeater. He is on his way to being Billy Southworth's "cousin." Some time back, Rickey sold another Dodger star, Pete Reiser, to the same Braves. Reiser is jubilant. So is Southworth.

"I don't think I ever felt better," Reiser told me the other day. "My legs are fine again—and so is my arm. I'm running into no more walls. I'm up to full weight—180 pounds." It might be noted that Reiser was only 30 years of age on St. Patrick's day, sharing this date with Bobby Jones.

Reiser is in his prime. I saw him play third in a recent spring training game and make four beeline throws to first, even rocking the stalwart first baseman, Earl Torgeson. Pete was burning the ball across.

"I have big plans for Reiser," Southworth told me. "I mean if his arm is O.K. I'm not worried about his legs or health. He is not only a fine ballplayer, but a great hitter and a natural competitor. He can help us more than you might think. Pete has known more than his share of raw luck. The tide is about due to turn the other way. If it does, the Braves will look even better than I think they are—and I'm not selling them short.

"Watch that Torgeson at first. He might be the best first baseman in either league this season. Sain and Spahn are my stand-bys, but Vern Bickford has improved sharply and Bill Voiselle will be quite a help. Stanky is again in top condition. His cracked ankle is O.K. I have a fine-looking young catcher in Paul Burris.

"My club is much better than it was last year. It has to be. Every team in our league is stronger. At least most of them are. For example, the Cardinals and Pirates will be better, and the Dodgers, with all their fast kids, is no club you can ever loaf against.

"But I still honestly believe we have enough to win for Boston again. If I didn't think so, I certainly wouldn't say so. But this is going to be a scramble."

* * *

The Most-Improved Team

The most improved team in either league, probably is part of the Philadelphia Story. The Philadelphia Story in baseball has been a rather sad one for some time.

But Connie Mack revived old dreams last season, and not only the veteran Connie but many so-called fairly-smart people believe his Athletics have a pennant chance this new season. Not second—not third—not fourth—but first.

Just as big a story is the chance the Phillies have. They are too young to win any pennant. But smart baseball people tell me they can finish second or third. They probably won't. But they look like a big league ball club on a rampage.

They have a better outfield than either the Braves, Dodgers or the Cardinals in Del Ennis, Richie Ashburn and Bill Nicholson. They have one of the best infields in either league with Eddie Waitkus at first, plus Puddinhead Jones at third. Their catching is only fair.

The Phillies represent the story of the new National league. They can finish second or seventh. They can finish seventh and still be almost as good as the 1949 pennant winner. They deserve support from their fans, for here is not only a good ball club, but an interesting one.

I had a long talk today with my favorite pitcher. His name is Ewell Blackwell of the Reds.

In 1947 Blackwell was far and away the best pitcher in the game—not barring Feller, Newhouser or anyone else. Working for the lowly Reds, he won 16 straight games. He pitched a no-hitter and came close to another in his next start. Working with the Yankees or Dodgers that same year, Blackwell would have won 30 games and lost three or four. He might have won 35 games.

Livestock—Solution To Three 'Problems'

Increased production of livestock will solve the bug-a-boo of surplus grain, aid soil conservation, and create efficiencies which will make possible the profitable sale of more meat and animal products at prices more people can afford to pay.

Moreover, the need for soil conservation is just another argument in favor of more emphasis on animal agriculture, according to H. E. Babcock, one of America's top agricultural leaders.

Grass crops hold and build up the soil, and animal manure adds valuable humus while acting as fertilizer: for example, the rich black soil of Iowa is the result of centuries of grass and grazing buffalo.

"I got my start in life through picking up a pin in the street," said the wealthy man. "I was refused employment by a merchant, and on my way out I saw a pin. I—"

"Yes, I know," said the young man he was addressing, "you picked it up; the merchant was impressed by your carefulness, called you back, and made you head of the firm. I have heard of that boy so often."

"No," replied the successful one with a smile. "I saw the pin, picked it up, and sold it. It was a diamond one."

Beat well with electric mixer on low or medium speed, or by hand with large wooden spoon. Add shortening, beating until thoroughly mixed. Step 3: Spoon dough into well greased muffin pans, filling about one-third full. Step 4: Let rise in warm place (90° to 95° F.) until dough has risen level with top of muffin pans (about 25 to 30 minutes.) Step 5: Bake in moderately hot oven (375° to 400° F.) 20 min. Step 6: Remove from pans and serve warm. Yields 18 to 24 rolls.

Try this new way to faster, easier baking. Red Star Dry Yeast keeps fresh for months — right on the pantry shelf. It's always ready when you need it.

MORE CORN . . . As much as 25 more bushels of corn per acre have resulted from alternate planting of rows of corn and soybeans, says Prof. A. L. Lang, University of Illinois agronomist. Corn stood better and gave better quality ears. Although not fully tested, this method seems to offer crops greater access to sunlight, moisture and plant food.

A Great Northern rotary plow is almost hidden by a mammoth snow slide in Western Washington. Snowfighting in January and February cost Great Northern more than 1 million dollars—not one cent of it taxpayers' money. The railways are the nation's only common carriers which wholly pay their own way.

RAIL COSTS AND FREIGHT RATES

A spokesman for several hundred Great Northern customers recently protested that present freight rates on farm products "are burdensome."

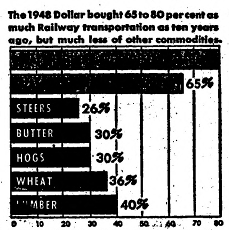
"Burdensome" is a two-way word in a discussion of freight rates, for burdensome costs of producing railway services have been and continue to be wholly responsible for transportation charges to shippers. Moreover, neither Great Northern nor any other railway has control over prices they must pay or charges they may make for their services.

Except for a small and short-lived increase during the early part of World War Two, freight rates had not advanced from 1938 until July 1, 1946, when the first postwar boost became effective. This increase was authorized long after railway wages, costs of supplies and prices of commodities hauled by rail started skyward.

From July 1, 1946 to date, freight rates have risen 46.9 per cent in the West. That figure looks substantial on paper — but, the cold fact is that Great Northern has not benefited from the full 46.9 per cent. The actual total increase to the railway has been only 28.2 per cent!

Rate increases authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, after prolonged hearings, not always have been wholly applicable to some commodities in long haul movement—an important part of Great Northern's total business. Concurrence with the I. C. C. on increases has been delayed by some state regulatory bodies, while some state commissions have reduced I. C. C.-authorized rates on traffic moving within a state—principally farm products.

The 1948 Dollar bought 65 to 80 per cent as much Railway transportation as ten years ago, but much less of other commodities.



PER CENT OF 1938 QUANTITY BOUGHT BY 1948 DOLLAR
U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, July 1938 - July 1948 Prices

Now let's look at the increase in costs of services and supplies Great Northern must buy to keep the railway plant operating efficiently. From December 1940 through December 1948 the company's wage bill (two-thirds of all operating expense) increased 66 per cent, and another whopping wage boost just has been granted. Other notable increases in that period were: locomotive fuel oil 170 per cent; diesel oil 122 per cent; coal 95 per cent; grey iron castings 198 per cent; ties 258 per cent; car-building lumber 269 per cent; grain doors 150 per cent.

That booming railway operating costs in the postwar years have necessitated repeated advances in freight rates on products of farms and ranches is a subject of deepest concern to Great Northern. Yet, the future health of the American railway industry and its importance to the national economy and protection is in the hands of the American public—the topic of a discussion which will appear in the next issue of this publication.

Tzintzuntazan

At the time of the Spanish conquest, Tzintzuntazan, in the state of Michoacan, west of Mexico City, was the center of the Tarascan empire, second in importance only to the Aztecs. Tzintzuntazan today is a place of about 1,000 people, of mixed Spanish and Indian blood, who have lost a great many elements of their ancient culture which made them the chief rivals of the people of Montezuma, notes the Smithsonian institution. The Spaniards described a city of 40,000, although this figure undoubtedly included rather widespread suburbs.

Railroad Safety

During the year 1947 there were fewer fatalities on United States railroads than in any other year on record. The previous low in that respect was in 1939 when traffic, measured in ton-miles and passenger-miles, was only one-half as great as in 1947. Nonfatal injuries, on the other hand, were considerably greater than the 1939 total, though not so numerous as in the war years, when freight and passenger traffic was at peak levels. Comparing 1947 with 1946, total fatalities to all classes of persons numbered 4,186, a reduction of 176 or 4.0 per cent under 1946. Nonfatal injuries numbered 43,780 in 1947, a reduction of 3,227 or 66.2 per cent under 1946.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Effect Disputed as Pact Signed; Bradley Urges European Fortress; Senate Okays More Aid for Chinese

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

PACT SIGNED:

Hopes & Fears

For better or worse . . . for a hope of peace or a step toward war . . . the North Atlantic pact was now a reality. Whether it would insure peace or aggravate tensions into war, no one could say with finality. There could be no doubt anywhere, however, that its signing was completed in a world atmosphere redolent of both hopes and fears.

STRIPPED of its mumbo-jumbo phraseology, the intent of the pact is simple: It declares that an act of aggression against any of the signatory nations shall be construed as an attack against all. It does not make mandatory military help by any signatory to any pact member who may be attacked. The degree of assistance is optional.

Therein, as many observers have pointed out, lies the pact's strength and its weakness. The strength inherent in the proviso lies in its leaving to signatory nations exercise of their own judgment regarding the degree of emergency in the event of attack, and does not precipitately hurl all pact signatories into war willy-nilly. Its weakness stems from the fact that aggressor nations may be willing to gamble that great powers will not be willing to wage all-out war to come to the assistance of a smaller signatory.

THERE WAS STAUNCH denial that the pact was aimed at any particular nation, but only a moron would concede the truth in that. The pact definitely was aimed at blocking Russian aggression against the smaller signatories, and there was little effort to hide the hope that the pact would do just that.

On the other hand, there were those who felt the step was one which would ultimately lead to war as Russia would brook no actions short of war to stop the tide of Soviet imperialism.

Pact signatories were the United States, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal and the United Kingdom.

DEFENSE:

Arms for Europe

The United States was urged to follow up swiftly its peace-insurance action in signing the North Atlantic pact. General Omar N. Bradley, U. S. chief of staff, called for a military aid program which would strengthen western Europe as a fortress and stop an aggressor before he could overrun the continent.

Bradley rejected the idea widely held among some military men that it would be impossible to stop Russia from conquering all Europe if it chose. The best thing the United States could do, according to that theory, would be to strike back with air power and lead a counterattack which would eventually liberate the continent.

BRADLEY flatly contended that such strategy would breed despair among potential allies in Europe and render them impotent.

His remarks carried added significance because he stated he had been requested by the state department to comment publicly on the military security significance of the North Atlantic pact and its implementation.

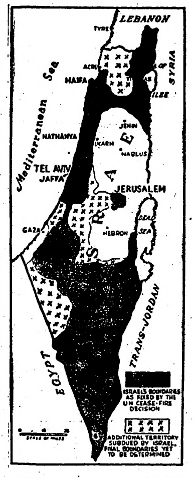
He took a hefty swing at the Soviets, although omitting them by name, when he declared: "If to be resolute is to be hostile, then we shall have to endure the slanders of those who call us hostile. For their slanders are the expressions of angry resentment from jackals denied their plunder."

HE DECLARED the Atlantic pact had removed the world crisis from a "cold war" stage, and warned that America could all "too readily become the victim of our own slogans . . . if we do not soon renounce our catch-word addiction in all too many minds that 'cold war' is the overture to real war, we may find ourselves with a mentality that accepts real war as inevitable."

But did his urging to strengthen the "ramparts" of Europe in favor of air power and liberation later, mean strengthen the pact countries' defenses with men as well as guns and munitions.

That was a possibility the people of the U.S. would have to consider.

Israel's Miracle



This map compares for the first time the boundaries of the U.N. decision with the area actually won by Israel arms. The miracle of reclamation is Israel's present achievement and future hope.

ARMISTICE:

Jews in Dissent

Amid verbal strife and dissension, the government of Israel consumated an armistice with Trans-Jordan. Despite vociferous opposition, the government won a test vote of confidence in parliament.

WHATEVER ELSE the armistice may have effected, a foreign office spokesman said it had added 150 square miles to Israel. This area was to be pared off the northwestern area of the bulge by an Arab withdrawal from the Hadera-Afula road and off the western edge by a withdrawal from the Tel Aviv-Haifa railroad.

But the armistice was not effected without bitterness. Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's opponents charged the armistice was tantamount to recognizing the incorporation of the Jenin-Tulkarm-Nablue bulge north of Jerusalem into the Hashemite Jordan kingdom of monarch Abdullah.

The vote followed a stormy five-hour debate. Opponents charged the armistice opened Israel to Anglo-American influence. Ben-Gurion retorted that possibly Trans-Jordan was a puppet government (of Britain) but there were also puppet parties in Israel serving outside interests.

CHINA:

More Aid

There would be more aid from the United States—but, locking the door too late—there was a condition. The senate wrote into the aid bill a ban on shipments to Communist-controlled areas.

IT LONG HAD BEEN public information that much of the suplies and munitions sent by this country to aid the Chinese Nationalists in their fight against communism had fallen into Communist hands. The procedure was beginning to make America and its Far East policy appear a bit silly.

Now, congress had moved to stop a procedure which must have afforded no little amusement to Russia and her Communist hordes in China.

THE U. S. SENATE accepted an amendment to the aid measure to make available 54 million dollars in "frozen" China aid funds—"provided it is spent only in areas controlled by the Nationalist government."

RUSSIANS ON RAMPAGE

Soviet Troops Attack Army Post in Iran

Even as the North Atlantic pact was being signed in an actual, though disavowed, effort to stem the spread of Russian imperialism, a military informant in Tehran reported Russian forces had attacked an Iranian army post. The report stated a Russian regiment, supported by tanks and armored cars had made a new foray into Azerbaijan province.

Iranian troops replied to the fire and an "important battle" ensued, the source said.

The reported clash occurred during a time of reported strained relations between the countries. Russian pressure on Iran had been mounting, causing speculation that the oil-rich Middle East country would become the next focal point in the "cold war."

Rail oddities
In 1855 a railroad president commissioned a poor but promising young artist to paint a picture of the company's new round-house. It was to be used as an advertisement and the price paid was $75.00.
Years later—by an almost incredible coincidence—the artist himself ran across the picture in a second hand shop in Mexico City, and he bought it back.
The painting, "The Lackawanna Valley," now hangs in the National Gallery of Art in Washington. It is admired as one of the finest early works of the renowned artist, George Inness. (1825-1894)

FERTILIZER PAYS . . . It pays to add plant food to new legume-grass seedings. Note difference between fertilized area (left) and untreated area (right). Fertilized area has a thicker stand and better growth. Roots of alfalfa or sweet clover, fed plenty of phosphate and potash, anchor themselves more firmly in the ground and resist winter heaving. You get more hay and pasture. Legumes add organic matter and condition the soil for other crops in the rotation.

SOIL BUILDER . . . Deep-probing sweet clover tap-roots (left) pry down below plow sole of tight soils and open them to air and water. Roots and tops add organic matter and make a thicker, richer layer of topsoil for bigger crop yields. Red clover (right) always stays "upstairs." With thicker topsoil, more plant nutrients and water are available to crops. To do top job, tap-rooted legumes need plenty of phosphate and potash fertilizer.

BUSHEL-BOOSTING TOPSOIL . . . Missouri University agronomists proved crop-boosting worth of thick topsoil. Corn yield was only 30 bushels per acre on field with no topsoil (left), 50 bushels on one layer of topsoil (center) and 70 bushels when grown on double layer (right). Topsoil can be thickened on any farm by growing deep-rooted legumes in rotation and feeding them well with phosphate and potash fertilizer.

Beginning of Central Park

In 1840, acting on a suggestion by newspaper editor William Cullen Bryant, New York City bought the 840 acres comprising Central Park for $7,389,700. That area is now valued, on the basis of adjoining real estate, at $600,000 an acre, or more than $500,000,000, almost a 750 per cent increase. After the squatters, moonshiners and counterfeiters were run out of the area, 3,000 men worked almost 11 years to give the park its present topography.

Lonely Isles

The remote British islands of Tristan da Cunha, in the far South Atlantic, are known as the "lonely isles." World War I was nearly over before news of its outbreak reached inhabitants of these islands. Years passed before the islanders heard of the armistice. By contrast, it was through World War II that Tristan da Cunha began losing its isolation. In 1942, a secret meteorlogical and radio station was set up there by the British royal navy and the South African air force.

Marionette Shows

Properly staged, a marionette show creates an amazing illusion of size in the minds of the audience. Instead of seeming their actual height, the marionettes appear to be of almost human size, an effect which is greatly increased because the scenery is also made to correspond.

Lightning As a Fetiche

Fabulous tales about lightning still circulate throughout the world. In Europe, thousands of objects popularly identified as thunderbolts or thunderstorms are preserved in the homes of country folk, who regard them as charms against a number of harmful agencies.

Nathan Hale

Nathan Hale, captain in the U. S. army, was apprehended within enemy lines while seeking information. He was executed on the morning of September 22, 1776. His last words were: "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." A new bronze tablet marking the execution place has been set up by the Yale club of New York and Mary Washington colonial chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Roentgen—Great Discoverer

In November, 1895, an obscure physics professor, working in a modest little laboratory at the University of Wurzburg in Bavaria, came upon a mysterious ray which had the power to penetrate flesh, cloth, wood and metal. This tall, slender, bearded teacher was Wilhelm Konrad Roentgen. Using the mathematical symbol "x" for the unknown quantity, he called his discovery the X-ray.

Rheumatic Fever in Pets

Rheumatic fever, dreaded disease of children, also may strike pet animals, Dr. Don Ward of Santa Ana, Calif., reported in the Journal of the American Veterinary Medical association. He described cases in cats which recovered under intensive medical treatment and added that he also has observed the condition in several young dogs.

Housing Shortage Reason

In 1920 the population of the United States was 105 million. Today it is over 140 million. Along with the increase in population, the size of families decreased from 4.1 in 1930 to 3.8 in 1940, which means that eight years ago it took 7.9 per cent or 19 more dwelling units to house 1,000 people than it did in 1930.

South American Attractions

Most popular attractions in South America are the Inca ruins in Peru, winter sports in Chile, fishing, hunting and sight-seeing excursions in the famous Chile-Argentine lake region, and the unique charm and fascination of cosmopolitan cities such as Lima, Santiago and Buenos Aires.

Some Piece of Paper

Largest check in history was signed at the end of the government's last fiscal year. It was drawn for $7,500,000,000, and constituted the unemployment trust fund which had been invested in one-year government securities, and was to be so re-invested.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Russ Reject U. N. Berlin Proposal; Stalin Hits Three Western Powers As Attempting to Start a New War

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DIFFERENT COAL STRIKE . . . French troops in battle array march into the Villiers mine in the St. Etienne area of France as the government seized strike-bound coal mines throughout northern France. Vicious rioting and assorted civil battles preceded the government's action in taking over the mines.

REJECTION:
U. N. Proposal

Russia wouldn't play ball with the United Nations on the settlement of the Berlin dispute.

A six-power "face-saving" resolution for solving the crisis was presented to the U. N. security council and promptly batted down by the Soviets—to the surprise of no one concerned.

THE RESOLUTION proposed that Russia lift the Berlin blockade immediately; that the four military governors of Germany begin immediate negotiations to implement the Moscow agreement of August 30 for a Soviet-backed, four-power controlled mark in Berlin by November 20, and that a foreign ministers' council be convened within 10 days thereafter to take up other serious differences over Germany.

Russia's stated objection to the resolution was that it provided for the lifting of the blockade before the currency control went into effect.

Previously, the western powers had turned down Andrei Vishinsky's counter proposal for simultaneous lifting of the blockade and putting into effect the currency agreement.

IN REALITY, this point of difference upon which the latest deadlock centered was a minor one, but it served to illustrate the vast gap that must be closed before a meeting of minds between the East and West can be achieved.

MOREOVER, it has become increasingly clear that Moscow does not even have any desire to lift the blockade. It is, for them, too good a weapon with which to attempt to bludgeon the U. S. and the West into granting them further concessions in Germany, including a voice in the operation of the all-valuable Ruhr industrial area.

STALIN TALKS:
'Horrors'

In what is probably the most amazing outburst he has made since the war, Soviet Premier Josef Stalin told the world that the U. S., Great Britain and France are seeking a new war through a "policy of aggression."

The accusation, despite the high level of its source, amounted to nothing more than a repetition of the already stereotyped Russian practice of attempting to turn an opponent's reasoning back on him.

HOWEVER, he added, the "public forces favoring peace" are too strong to permit "the instigators of a new war" to plunge the world again into the "horrors" of conflict.

Stalin named Winston Churchill as "the main instigator of a new war" and predicted that Churchill's "pupils of aggression" would be rejected by the people just as Churchill has been.

Although he did not label President Truman or any other leader as a "pupil in aggression," the implication was too clear to be mistaken, particularly since the Moscow radio had broadcast a prediction that Mr. Truman would be defeated on November 2.

STALIN accused the U. S. and Britain of twice rejecting settlements of the Berlin crisis with Russia and said that debate on the Berlin question in the U. N. security council "was a display of aggression on the part of Anglo-American and French ruling circles."

The British and Americans, the Soviet premier said, declared "null and void" an agreement reached in the Kremlin conferences August 30 that would have lifted the Soviet blockade and ended the crisis.

HE CHARGED that the western powers fear "most of all" to reach any agreement with the Soviet Union.

"What they want is not agreement and cooperation, but talk about agreement and cooperation, so as to put the blame on the U. S. S. R. by preventing agreement, and to 'prove' that cooperation is impossible."

Stalin's statement obviously was issued as a high-powered propaganda stroke—a move the Russians undoubtedly hoped would tip the Berlin scales in their favor.

Old-Fashioned, but . . .

Toothaches are old-fashioned. That is the opinion of Dr. John C. Brauer of the University of Washington school of dentistry, a leading authority on children's dentistry and care of the teeth.

Dr. Brauer said few children would experience dental pain during their lives if they practiced preventive measures now known to dental science. Most older people are doomed because of their past habits.

Headliners

'AND NOW, SIT BACK, RELAX, AND LISTEN TO AMOS 'N' ANDY'

IN YORK, Pa. . . . Mrs. Walter Sechrist made a wide-eyed announcement that her gas range picks up short wave transmissions made by her next-door neighbor, an amateur radio operator, vowed it had broadcast a conversation between the neighbor and another operator in South America.

IN SALEM, Mass. . . . Robert C. Carter claimed in a divorce suit that his wife had deserted him a block from the church just two minutes after they were married in 1944.

IN HAGERSTOWN, Mo. . . . Thieves broke into the Potomac Edison building, got away with a specially equipped camera set up to take pictures of thieves breaking into the Potomac Edison building.

IN LITTLE BRICKHILL, Eng. . . . Postmaster N. C. Parrott looked down his nose at the man with the gun trying to rob him of his postal receipts, sneered, "The revolver is not loaded, you know." "Sorry," said the crushed desperado, slinking away.

IN DURAND, Wis. . . . Frank Weimirski was forced to reassure his customers as to the fact that he still was in the popcorn and soft drink business after he began making deliveries with an old hearse.

BLUFFING:
In Berlin

Gen. H. H. Arnold, wartime commander-in-chief of the U. S. air forces, turned up in the news with a military man's hearty opinion about what to do with the Russians in Berlin.

"WHY NOT take a motor convoy and push it through the corridor to Berlin?" he suggested. "Perhaps we might have learned something from Gen. George Patton's technique. If Patton were running the show he would take it through."

Russia, he claimed, is attempting a tremendous bluff against the U. S. and the western allies, but is "not ready to fight, doesn't want to fight and won't fight" if someone should call her bluff.

WHAT would the Russians do if an armed convoy did plow through the blockade? "Not much, if anything," was Arnold's laconic estimate.

"It would be a grave and basic error to let the Communists bluff us out in the present deadlock in Germany.

"They are not ready to fight and they do not want to fight. We should curb the national tendency to be in awe of the Russians, an awe amounting almost to fear.

"TIME plays with the Russians. We have the superior power now. They may have it later. Meantime, it would be folly to let them bridge the gap by bluff alone."

Whether he was right or wrong, Hap Arnold at least had done the worrying U. S. public one favor: By reducing the problem to hard, simple terms of pure action and divorcing it from the intricate realm of diplomacy he made it appear more understandable, less overwhelming and less frightening. General Arnold, at least isn't expecting a war tomorrow.

Winter Book Odds Not All Fair

By GRANTLAND RICE

THE WINTER BOOK on either racing or baseball hits you with a chunk of low-priced odds on many favorites that seem far from inviting.

The Winter Book, as you know, is supposed to offer advance odds on horses or teams that give you a better break than if you wait until the race gets underway. They are not giving anybody a better break in making Cleveland 6 to 5 and Boston's Braves 7 to 5. They have Blue Peter at 3 to 1 in the Derby, and I'm not sure you can't do better on Derby Day.

Grantland Rice

Col. Ed Bradley, the departed horseman and gambler, whose advice was highly valued, used to say it was 4 to 1 or maybe 5 to 1 against any certain nominee even starting in the Derby. Out of more than 100 early entries, only 10 or 12 go to the post. Who can say what fine horse will or will not be present on the big day?

Sun Briar never went to the Derby post. Stagehand didn't, when he apparently had the big race sewed up on the Tuesday before the race. Ocean Wave didn't, after wrecking the Derby Trial.

Getting back to baseball's Winter Book, I would say the Braves, Cardinals and Dodgers are extremely close—that the Pirates have a good chance—that the Giants are not clearly out of it, but not too threatening either.

The Braves, Dodgers and Cardinals are all ranked well over the Giants by Florida-trained ballplayers who remember the Giants from last year—and can see little or no improvement.

I still think the Cardinals are the best ball club in the National League by six or seven games. But no one can say how many Cardinals will be on the ball field, and how many in the hospital, after mid June or early July. They are an eight-year-old club, dating back to 1940, 1941 and 1942.

They have many more good ballplayers on their roster than either Braves, Dodgers, Pirates or Giants. I mean such stars as Musial, Slaughter, Marion, Brecheen, Pollet, Schoendienst—maybe Kurowski and Munger. But they have too many bad backs and sore arms to consider.

The Winter Book figures on Cleveland in the American League are clearly out of line. The Indians were 11½ games ahead of the Red Sox last June and had this big lead shot away. The Indians and the Red Sox should each be 2 to 1 or 2½ to 1.

The Yankees can have the best pitching staff in baseball. Their infield and catching is still their big problem. They need more infield power.

Connie Mack is quite sincere in believing his Athletics can win. And they might. It is the first time in 18 years that 86-year-old Mr. Mack is extremely optimistic.

The Racing Side

Racing is now ready to break out in a wild rash from Maryland to New England — not overlooking New York.

A number of questions will soon be answered: How good is Blue Peter? How good is Capot? Mr. Busher? Old Rockport? How will Citation look on his return to action? What horse will beat Coaltown? What overlooked racer will suddenly pop up as Assault did in 1946? Who will take over the Triple Crown? How will the Triple Crown look without a Calumet challenger of class? Will there be one?

Blue Peter, owned by Joseph Roebling, trained by Andy Schuttinger, is at least partly a mystery horse. Andy Schuttinger ranks Blue Peter, at this stage, over Citation at the same spot on the calendar last year.

There are many who believe Blue Peter is well ahead of the other three-year-olds. There are other horsemen who don't think Blue Peter has the ruggedness to be a great three-year-old. They keep darkly hinting at uncertain legs over a distance. There has been no proof that anything is wrong with Blue Peter's legs — except their winning speed.

Blue Peter won six stakes in a row, including most of the big ones, as a two-year-old. But there can be a swift and decisive change from a two-year-old to a three-year-old. Also there will be other horses running in the Derby, Preakness and Belmont—Greentree's Capot, a certain threatener—Mr. Busher, if in shape—Old Rockport, with the blood of Equipoise and Man o' War in his veins—Ben Whitaker's Prince Quest — one or two John Hertz's possibilities — and Fred Hooper's Olympia and Ocean Drive.

Plant Food Called 'Good Buy' at '49 Farm Price Levels

CHICAGO—Stressing that fertilizer is a "good buy" at present prices, Missouri University agricultural economists declared that the generous use of plant food should be profitable for farmers this year.

"Money spent for fertilizer is an investment that will pay out in a short time," these economists point out. "It will get more efficient crop production—more bushels or pounds of feed per acre with little or no additional labor cost. Fertilizer prices have increased much less than the price of farm products in recent years."

Fertilizer does its best job of crop boosting when it is teamed with management practices that build up soil structure and keep the land in place after it is built up, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee declared.

"When you build soil structure, you provide the most favorable growing conditions for crops," says a statement issued by the committee. "Well-structured soil is a better 'warehouse' for plant nutrients and moisture. Crop roots have all the leg room they need to forage for nutrients, water and air. The result is higher yields at a lower cost per unit.

"The way to build soil structure is to follow a rotation centered around deep-rooted legumes and grasses. Legumes such as sweet clover and alfalfa add organic matter. Their drill-like taproots bore through tough, tightly packed soil and open it to air and water. When grasses and legumes are well fed with fertilizer carrying phosphate and potash they develop sturdy growth above and below ground. Plowed under, the tops and roots enrich and mellow the soil."

Phosphate Added to Manure Balances Plant Food Content

CHICAGO — Adding superphosphate to barnyard manure before it is spread in the field is a profitable practice for Corn Belt farmers, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in a statement made public here.

"Many farmers report that a load of phosphated manure is more effective than two loads of untreated manure as a top-dressing for new legume-grass seedings or old established hay fields or pastures," says the statement.

"Superphosphate gives the manure a better plant food balance. Prof. C. J. Chapman, extension agronomist of the University of Wisconsin, points out that manure is relatively low in phosphorus. An average ton of manure with bedding, he says, contains 10 pounds of nitrogen, 5 pounds of phosphate and 10 pounds of potash. By adding 25 pounds of superphosphate to each ton you can increase the manure's phosphate content to 30 pounds per ton.

"Prof. Chapman says superphosphate helps the manure hold nitrogen that might otherwise be lost."

Methods of adding phosphate to the manure may vary according to farm conditions, but the program should be carried on throughout the year, the statement says.

"One method is to place the superphosphate in the spreader as the manure goes onto the field," the statement points out. Prof. Chapman recommends adding 25 to 30 pounds on each load.

"Another way is to place superphosphate in the gutters of the stable or open run barns, at the rate of one pound per cow per day. Prof. Chapman says superphosphate, thus applied, will absorb considerable amounts of liquid manure. It will also hold any free ammonia that might otherwise be lost by evaporation when fermented manure is hauled and spread on the land. Prof. Chapman cautions that superphosphate spread on driveways may irritate the feet of cows."

Sod Crops Profitable

Sod crops are one of the best profit builders on a farm, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out. More grass and legumes means you can carry more cattle or hogs per acre. A good legume-grass sod builds soil structure and mellows the land for crops following. To get good top growth and root development, lime the soil according to tests and add plenty of phosphate and potash.

Shippers are getting more efficient railway service through wider use of diesel locomotives. The Great Northern freight diesel above cost nearly $500,000.00. Railways cannot continue giving efficient transportation unless they are allowed to charge enough for services to cover costs and provide for the future—which present earnings do not permit.

THE PUBLIC MUST DECIDE

This is the second of two discussions on railway freight rates. The first dealt largely with the one reason for rate advances in the past 2½ years: the staggering cost of producing railway service—a cost which higher transportation charges have yet to offset, with consideration of a reasonable margin of profit and encouragement for the future!

Business was good on Great Northern last year; but, let's compare it with the so-called "boom" year of 1928, when the railway collected its largest prewar revenue. Last year Great Northern handled 62 per cent more freight and 47 per cent more passenger traffic than in 1928. It received 90 million dollars more from shippers and travelers last year than in 1928.

However, Great Northern's operating expense last year was 94 millions greater than in 1928; so, in spite of the 90-million-dollar increase in gross income, the railway actually had 4 millions less net income in 1948 than in 1928. And, during that 20-year period 233 millions in new money was invested in the property.

That discouraging example of railway economics points up at least three inescapable conclusions: 1. Users of railway freight services are not being over-charged; 2. Present rates are not commensurate with the cost of providing railway services; 3. The public must decide—and sooner than it now realizes—the future position of the American railway industry in the nation's economy.

The public is confronted with these alternatives in dealing with the railways:

- Pay rates and fares covering cost of services, and providing sufficient profit to encourage investments constantly needed for costly improvements necessary to maintain an efficient plant and maximum services. This course also would assure the country the physically-strong, dependable railway transportation arm it had during World War Two.
- Continue to underpay railways for freight and passenger services, with inevitable discouragement of investors, deterioration of plant and resulting poor transportation, in addition to a weakened, inefficient rail transport system in a national emergency.
- Socialize the railways—an experiment tried during World War One, and resulting in a 1½-billion-dollar loss to the government (the taxpayers) in spite of a 40 per cent increase in freight rates; poor, indifferent service and a disastrously-deteriorated railway plant. Socialization would mean higher freight rates, a greater tax burden, loss to states of railways' enormous tax payments, a run-down railway plant with resultant inefficient and undependable service—and the beginning of state ownership of all American industry.

The public—specifically shippers—must decide which of the three alternatives is best for them, the nation and the railway industry. The super-regulated railways cannot exist in face of the unfairly-subsidized operations of highway, air and water carriers unless the public is willing to pay enough for rail services to keep the industry solvent and in a healthy condition.

"I'm going to use Peavey 2,4-D Weed Killer again this year...

...it's the best there is!"
says OLE SONDROL, Buxton, N.D. Farmer

"I sprayed 700 acres last year, in flax, barley, oats and wheat.
"We cleaned out the mustard.
"In one field, Canada thistle was very heavy, and two weeks after spraying you couldn't see a thistle, even though Canada thistle is usually hard to kill.
"I'm going to use Peavey 2,4-D again this year—it's the best there is."

(Peavey 2,4-D is an amine formulation. The amine form is recommended by all northwest agricultural experiment stations for crop spraying. We also have the ester form of 2,4-D for those who desire it.)

Marshall County to Benefit

A bill, validating alleged overpayments on ditch bonds in seven Northern Minnesota counties including Marshall county, was passed into law last Tuesday over Governor Youngdahl's veto of the measure, both houses over ruling the veto, according to the Warren Sheaf.

Marshall county taxpayers will be the ultimate gainers under the new law, which validates excess payments of $436,791.86 from the state treasury. Other counties to benefit are Beltrami, Lake of the Wooks, Mahnomhn, Koochiniching Aitkin and Roseau

Senator Donald Sinclaire of Stephen handled the bill in the Senate where he secured full cooperation of that body. In the house, Rep. Curtiss Olson of Roseau engineered the bill of which Rep. Emil Morberg of Oslo was co-author.

The legislatures of 1929, 1931, and 1933 authorized limited payments to the Northern counties including Marshall, to pay off outstanding ditch bonds. It was claimed that the state overpaid the claims by $435,791 to the counties. Since the so-called over payments were discovered, the question has been argued whether the state auditor or county auditors were at fault or whether the overpayments were due to misinterpretations of the law. The figures were accepted by former state auditor Ray P. Chase and present auditor Stafford King.

In his veto message, Youngdahl said the bill purports to validate the overpayments but left in doubt the status of a $78,022 obligation of four of the counties of the state. The governor questioned whether this is a proper solution of the diffculty and urged the legislature to seek some other solution. He charged that the bills passed both houses without full debate or full disclosure of the facts involved.

Slaw

Cool, crisp slaw is popular, especially when served with a tart, snappy dressing. Use either French dressing or mayonnaise, but be sure it has zest and tang. A bit of chopped pickle or pickle relish, a dash of mustard or Worchestershire can be added for extra flavor. Add the dressing just long enough before serving to blend the flavors.

Largest Insurance Claim

Largest single casualty loss payment in history was paid during 1948 to the Scott Paper Co., of Chester, Pa. An explosion damaged a dryer roll paper machine in 1946 and knocked it out of operation for more than two years. Most of the insurance payment of more than $3,900,000 was made under machinery use and occupancy policies, according to the National Underwriter.

Green Wood

Green wood—that is, wood which has not been cut and seasoned long enough to dry out properly—is poor in heat value because of the moisture it contains. From 25 to more than 50 per cent of the weight of green wood is water, depending on the variety. The heat required to drive off the water is lost as far as warming the room is concerned.

49th State?

Alaska, oldest and largest of Uncle Sam's outlying territories, would like to be the 49th state of the union. If it achieves statehood, Texans may have cause to fret, notes the National Geographic society, for Alaska is larger than the Lone Star state, plus California, plus Montana — the three biggest states now in the Union.

Salad

For variety in salads, combine the cabbage with shredded carots and a small portion of grated onion. Diced unpeeled apples, celery, and nuts combined with shredded cabbage make a delicious salad. Another favorite combination is green pepper, cucumber, and cabbage.

Hearth Fires

The neat housekeeper who has her fireplace swept clean of all ashes is an inefficient fire-builder. Ashes should be kept level with the andirons to provide a bed of glowing charcoal which yields steady heat and helps ignite new logs as they are added.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Critics Attack New Farm Program As Urging Unprecedented Controls; Extension Seen for Marshall Plan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FARM PROGRAM:

Pros & Cons

President Truman's sweeping new farm program met with mixed response on Capitol Hill. Critics claimed it would carry the nation closer to socialism and would empower the government with unprecendented farm controls and powers.

PROPONENTS of the measure contended that consumers would be benefited because retail food prices would be allowed to seek their own level.

No matter which school of thought was correct, it was inescapable that the program would use taxpayers' dollars to guarantee farmers an income equal to that of a recent 10-year period.

Some opposition to the plan termed it as one that might be so expensive that it would push the U. S. treasury toward bankruptcy and would thoroughly regiment the farmer.

CHARLES F. BRANNAN, secretary of agriculture, conceded that "imponderables" such as weather and improved farm techniques made it impossible now to estimate the cost of the program.

He said of the program that it probably would mean a heavy drain on consumers' dollars.

He added that the government plans soon to undertake a costly new program to keep up the price of pork. If this program is approved, Brannan said, farmers would sell their pork for whatever it would bring. The government—meaning the public—then would pay the farmer the difference between the support price and the price the farmer actually received.

REPRESENTATIVE Anderson (R., Minn.) was not impressed. He estimated the total government outlay under the program might run as high as 10 billion dollars a year.

When it is remembered the government has no money except that which it gets from the people in taxes, objective observers were wondering who, if anyone, could benefit by the program, since farmer and consumer alike would be paying out added funds to finance it.

OLD AGE:

No Elixir

Impending old age affects many people in many ways. But to all who stand on its threshold, it is a topic of prime consideration. Of late, science, medicine and the psychiatrists all have been concerned with the subject and apparently little loath to be heard upon it.

LATEST to ponder the problem of how one should approach old age and what may be expected in this period of life was a conference of 800 physicians from all over the nation.

These physicians were all agreed that one of the biggest problems facing the medical profession in the problems of old age is making those added years healthy, happy and useful.

Throughout the conference the warning was sounded again and again that something must be done to give men and women not only long life, but a healthy, happy and useful old age.

THE SIMPLE and sad fact is that man's life has been extended beyond his present capacity to enjoy it as a useful citizen, the medical authorities agreed. For in prolonging life, science also prolonged suffering and misery — all the chronic illnesses and disabilities which plague mankind in the declining years.

Dr. Chauncey Leake, of the University of Texas, said that young people as early as in high school should be taught how to grow old—that is, how to cultivate hobbies and intellectual curiosity and how to develop a systematic regimen for physical and mental hygiene.

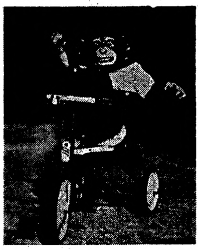
He declared the country should have an "old-age program" similar to the child-care program.

HE ALSO URGED increased research on drugs which may help the aged by preventing the disorders to which old people are subject.

But, coming out by the same door wherein he went, he warned that all hope for an "elixir of life" must be dismissed—that there is no "miracle drug" to restore youth to the aged.

Wherein he delivered himself of a truism well known even as Ponce de Leon was searching for the fountain of eternal youth.

Happy Birthday!



In the spring when care and and strife are most easily forgotten and put aside, the expression here of Pandora, Philadelphia zoo's precocious chimpanzee seems to epitomize the carefree abandon of spring. But Pandora is happy for another reason — she's clebrating her second birthday on her gift bicycle, and is she having fun!

MARSHALL PLAN:

Europe appeared certain of continued receipt of Marshall plan aid for another 15 months.

An enthusiastic house of representatives, shouting down or beating off every attempt to reduce the proposed appropriation figure, approved the gift bill by a vote of 354 to 18.

EVERY AMENDMENT which would have reduced the fund, or delayed action in order to study Europe's real needs, was brushed off by the majority.

The bill, as approved by the house, was for 200 million dollars less than the bill which was voted by the senate. The upper chamber passed a measure appropriating 5.58 billion dollars. The house bill called for 5.38 billion.

The house measure would authorize continued U. S. aid until July 1, 1950, subject to possible later cuts by the senate and house appropriations committees. It provided 272 million dollars to encourage American private business to invest in recovery projects abroad. Such investments would be guaranteed against loss by confiscation of property overseas.

FINAL VOTE on the house bill came after Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D., Mass.) pleaded against a GOP-led economy drive with a warning that the "world is looking either to Washington or the Kremlin."

On the passage vote, 125 Republicans joined 229 Democrats in favor of the bill.

Rep. John M. Vorys (R., Ohio) backed an amendment to cut off 380 million dollars from the appropriations, which was defeated. Vorys, saying he favored the Marshall plan and the North Atlantic pact, nevertheless warned that "we have to keep strong here at home . . . if we are to help out abroad." Vorys offered an amendment of his own to term what he called the "give-away" of American billions. It, too, was defeated.

SACRIFICE:

Love of Mate

If the name of vanity truly is "woman" then the sacrifice made by a Chicago woman for her husband must rank among the "no greater love" examples which are contained in the record.

MRS. JOAN BIERDZ, 20, had a husband who was striken with cancer. This disease had ravaged his face to a point where an adult told him that he "looked like the villian of Frankenstein." Mr. Bierdz was a patient in the Bronx, N.Y., veterans' hospital. He had written his wife that his face "caused comment" when he attended a movie, and that he would never go out again.

After receiving the letter from her 26-year-old husband, Mrs. Bierdz slashed both her arms. She was arraigned in a Chicago court on a charge of disorderly conduct.

SHE TOLD the judge: "I did it because I wanted people to look at me, instead of him . . . my husband has been told by VA doctors he can live only a year at most."

"CORNY" PROPOSAL

British Shudder at Hominy Grits Plan

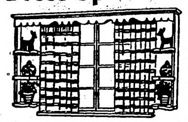
It was doubtful if the majority of Americans would work up any vast regret at the plight of Englishmen who faced the horrible possibility of having to eat American-provided hominy grits.

For, most Americans would realize that there are thousands of needy poor right here in the South in our own United States to whom hominy grits is a staple item of diet, and who would face actual want without them.

The situation was that congress might require 15 per cent of all corn shipped under the European recovery plan to take the form of cornmeal or hominy grits. England was reported aghast at the report. The explosive reaction was: "Now the yanks expect us to eat the ruddy stuff."

You Build It

Dress Up Windows With Valance



DECORATING problems can be solved quickly and economically, if you start with the windows. For that large window we suggest the valance and side shelf arrangement illustrated. Colorful potted plants seem to do exceptionally well when placed on these light, airy shelves. Regardless of the width of your window, you will have no difficulty building and fitting the valance. The full size pattern now available takes all the mystery out of making this attractive valance.

All materials needed can be purchased at your local lumber yard at small cost. The pattern is then traced on the board. Repeat tracing the pattern to obtain length of valance needed. Saw it out along the traced outlines and assemble each piece in exact position indicated on pattern. It's as easy as that and fun too! You'll be agreeably surprised to see in what a quick, economical way this pattern can solve your valance board problem.

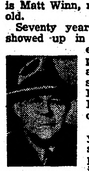
SPORTLIGHT

Connie and Lonnie and Mack

By GRANTLAND RICE

SEVENTY-FOUR years ago a kid of 13 saw Aristides win the first Kentucky Derby. His name is Matt Winn, now nearly 88 years old.

Seventy years ago, another kid showed up in one of the minor eastern ball parks, possibly Pittsfield, as a lean, lank scrawny catcher. His name is Connie Mack, now 86 years old.



Grantland Rice

Also some 70 years ago a high school kid did some pitching and playing end before he entered Yale. His name is Alonzo Stagg, also set at the tender age of 86.

Here are three men who might have the slogan, "Life can begin at any age, but it only warms up in the 80s." For Matt Winn is handling the production act for the 75th Kentucky Derby, the greatest of them all in the words and mind of this incredible turfman.

At the same time, Connie Mack is dreaming of his 10th pennant, actively in charge of a ball club that has a chance to win with just a few lucky spins from the wheel of chance.

And with Messrs. Winn and Mack featured entries in racing and baseball, Lonnie Stagg is actively helping young Lonnie, his son, to teach the young men in a Pennsylvania college how to tackle, block, run and throw passes.

Here are three men who can lay claim to a total of 260 years and are not only actively connected with sport, but in two instances, Winn and Mack, with the biggest shows of the year.

This has never happened before. Certainly no two men at the ages of 86 and 88 have played such leading roles in sport, and Stagg, at 86, is probably in better condition than either.

At a party one night in Los Angeles two years ago, I recall the block that Stagg put on the burly Curly Lambeau, explaining some play, as the big man, then coach of the Green Bay Packers, showed his astonishment, Connie Mack said, "I think I'll leave for my seat before I get killed."

It was Victor Hugo who wrote, in effect—"I feel in myself the future life. I am like a forest that more than once has been cut down. The new shoots are stronger and livelier than ever. My soul is more luminous when my body powers begin to fail. The snows of winter may be on my head, but the sunshine of eternal spring is in my heart."

This is the answer to Winn, Mack and Stagg—"The snows of winter may be on their heads, but the sunshine of eternal spring is in their hearts." They never look behind. They look only to the days and years ahead. The past is dust. It is only tomorrow that matters. This keeps 'em young.

The Big Year

Unless an unexpected jolt arrives at some early date, Messrs. Winn and Mack both figure that 1949 may be the best year either has ever known.

Colonel Winn is certain that his Derby will lure more than 100,000 spectators into his stands, and set a new mark. There seems to be grave doubt in many centers that any Kentucky Derby ever drew 100,000 fans.

Two years ago this doubt was expressed in loud tones. I asked Colonel Winn for the correct figures.

"I'll tell you," he said. "Tell those who doubt the figures that I will be glad to bet $10,000 that we had 100,000 or more spectators, and, if they care to take the bet, I'll guarantee to prove it to their complete satisfaction." No one cared to take the bet.

Derby Day at Churchill Downs is beyond description. You can call the place a madhouse and then retire. But for all that, it is a terrific show, due largely to tradition and the showmanship of Colonel Matt Winn. The amazing feature is that so many take their beating, year after year, and come back for more.

So far as competition goes, 1949 has everything it takes to build up interest with the possibility or probability of a big, well-balanced field. The next two weeks will tell us more about this.

In the same way, Connie Mack believes he has a good chance to win the American league flag again. He makes no pennant predictions, but he will explain to you that if one or two things happen, his Athletics will be in front at the finish. He fully expects to be running one-two-three down the stretch in September, and this time he is equipped with reserves to handle bad breaks.

IF YOUR SCISSORS REFUSE TO CUT ROSE STEMS AT THE FIRST SNIP, IT'S PROBABLY BECAUSE THEY'RE TOO DULL. IN ADDITION TO SHARPENING THE BLADES AND TIGHTENING THE SCREW HOLDING THEM TOGETHER, FILE OR GRIND A NOTCH IN ONE OF THE BLADES. THIS WILL HOLD THE STEM IN PLACE WHILE THE OTHER BLADE IS CUTTING IT FROM THE ROSE.

A DOOR OR WINDOW FASTENED WITH AN ADJUSTABLE HOOK OF THE TYPE SHOWN HERE CANNOT BE OPENED BY SMALL CHILDREN. THIS SAFETY HOOK IS MADE BY CUTTING A REGULAR DOOR HOOK IN TWO, THREADING THE FRESH-CUT ENDS AND SCREWING THEM INTO A TURNBUCKLE. A MERE TWIST WILL TIGHTEN OR LOOSEN THE HOOK.

Ironing a bias-cut skirt with the weave of the cloth minimizes bulging at the seams.

When using concrete for various odd jobs around the house in winter time, a couple pounds of salt added to each sack of cement will prevent freezing.

Remove grease spots from the surface of your electric iron by rubbing with ordinary corn meal.

When drying garments, if suspicious that the printed colors will bleed, dry garments on a hanger with an old sheet or bath towel run through sleeves and between front and back so that surfaces do not touch.

Fill centers of peach halves with cranberry sauce and top with slivers of blanched almonds for an extra colorful and flavorful garnish around poultry platters.

Save soap slivers and when you have quite a few, melt them down by boiling in a little water until all slivers are melted. Simmer away water until liquid is thick to make a lathery shampoo.

If the hot water bottle refuses to stay in place, sew a pocket on a bath towel, slip the bottle into pocket and wrap the towel around it.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College
Searcy, Arkansas

Paralysis

On March 14, at the direction of one man, our nation's coal production was choked off. More than 400,000 coal miners were asked to leave their jobs for two weeks to be followed by 67,000 railway employees whose jobs depended upon transporting coal.

The cause for this paralysis to a large section of our economy was not any grievance about working conditions, pay, pensions, or vacations. It appears, however, to result from personal dislike of one man for another. In response to the President's appointment of Dr. James Boyd as director of the U.S. Bureau of Mines, John L. Lewis ordered his United Mine Workers on a two-weeks layoff.

Excessive Power?

Within his field, John L. Lewis possesses the nearest approach to dictatorial powers of anyone to appear on the American scene. He has defied Presidents and Congresses, crippled production in the face of economic crises, and flouted the war effort by strikes in wartime. By directly controlling the output of a basic industry, he holds power to strangle our entire economy with a prolonged strike.

With this "spite" strike Lewis has encroached upon two basic fundamentals of our democratic progress: (1) The right of government to make appointments free of pressure, and (2) Freedom to work.

Warning Sign

This action presents a real danger signal to the American public. It shows what can happen when irresponsible leadership of a great body of influence—American labor—goes on a rampage. The implications are alarming. If any one individual were powerful enough to dictate governmental appointments with threats of strikes, a new era of demagogues would indeed be at hand. Such power would be potentially disastrous.

The weapon of indiscriminate strikes is one which labor leaders alone control. Neither government nor management possesses such a power. The rank and file of labor, too, because of their organization, are subject to the orders of those leaders. Many labor leaders recognize this situation and act in a far-sighted manner. However, the selfish actions of any one leader casts unfavorable reflections on the whole movement.

National Responsibility

No more loyal group of American citizens exists than the miners themselves. It is sad irony these people should suffer the brunt of the strike. According to the Associated Press, they will lose about $68 million in wages during the two week layoff. This means $68 million in food, clothing, and other essentials must be forfeited to the whims of one leader who was elected by workers to safeguard their interests.

This points up sharply the need for adequate labor legislation. Without violating the rights of labor, we must draw clearly the line where those rights end and national responsibility begins. The average worker has everything to gain in such legislation. Labor must be accorded complete protection from irresponsibility—found within its own leadership, or elsewhere.

35th Anniversary at Dunwoody

A 35th anniversary is being observed by Dunwoody Industrial Institute in 1949. The Minneapolis school isn't taking time out to celebrate, however, but is keeping at work to meet the needs of 5,000 Day and Evening School students who this year have flocked there for training.

It was on Dec. 14, 1914, that Mrs. W. H. Dunwoody, widow of the founder, threw the main switch which started the school on its course of service. At that time Dunwoody held classes for 70 boys in an old school building.

Now, Dunwoody operates a million and a half dollar plant, conducting both Day and Evening School to take care of the thousands of young men seeking practical trades training. Thru the years since 1914 more than 125,000 have taken advantsge of this training.

J. R. Kingman, Jr., Director of Dunwoody Institute, states that the big onrush of veterans applying for training is on the decline, and that many departments of the school are now able to take care of increastng numbers of current applications from high school graduates.

Mr. and Mrs. Murnette Johnson went to Fargo Sunday night to meet the latters mother, who came there by train from the west coast where she had spent the winter.

No Trick to Freeze Rhubarb

When the first ruby red stalks of rhubarb poke through the ground, it's time to give the family a special treat of rhubarb pie and tangy rhubarb sauce. But that's also the time, says Home Demonstration Agent Margaret Nelson to capture some of that spring freshness for next winter by freezing some rhubarb so the family can enjoy it when it is out of season.

Rubarb is one of the easeist garden products to prepare for freezing, but the success of the fresh product depends largely on the time it is harvested. According to J. D. Winter, in charge of frozen foods lavortary at the University of Minnesota, rhubarb should be picked before hot weather if it is to be frozen. After that it is likely to get tough and bitter.

There's little work involved in freezing rhubarb because there is no cooking. It is not even necessary to add sugar. Just wash and cut stalks into inch lengths. Fill frozen food containers or pile the rhubarb on squares of moisture-vapor-proof cellophane, laminated aluminum foil, pliofilm or other highgrade locker wrapping, wrap and heat-seal or tape to make an airtight package, lable with the date and name of product and freeze.

The dry rhubarb pack has kept well for a year at the University frozen foods laboratory, Winter says.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Signs Bill for Extension Of European Aid Another 15 Months; U. S. Launches Bond Sale Drive

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Men Who Found Kathy Remembered by Mail

The men who dug for little Kathy Fiscus, 3-year old who died in a California well shaft, were being remembered all over the nation.

More than 2,200 letters had been received by the Kathy Fiscus rescue fund from virtually every state in the union. Mayor Clark E. Bell, San Marino, chairman of the fund committee, said the first envelope opened contained $1,020—an average contribution of $5.10.

Donations ranged from 10 cents to $50. It was pointed out that if the average continued, it would mean a total of more than $11,000 for the men who worked for 52 hours to reach the child who fell to her death 92 feet down the well pipe.

AID BILL:

Has Truman Okay

A bill to give 5.58 billion dollars to the European recovery program over the next 15 months— with one billion available at once—was signed by President Truman.

MR. TRUMAN, as is a quaint capital custom in such maters, signed the bill with several pens—eight, in fact. Even Mr. Truman, himself, was moved to observe jestingly that "this will probably look like a forgery, but it really isn't."

The bill which Mr. Truman signed allots more than one-eighth of the entire budget of the United States to foreign aid.

Mr. Truman, ever a meticulous man, carefully wiped the points of the pens, handed one each to seven witnesses to the signing, and kept one for Sen. Arthur Vandenberg, who was unable to attend.

THERE WAS a check and balance in the bill, however. With the billion dollars to be made available at once, aid could be kept flowing to the Marshall plan countries of western Europe until congress votes the rest of the cash later.

CHURCHMEN:

UN Asks Facts

The United Nations wasn't heeding protests of Hungary and Bulgaria against its consideration of the trials of Cardinal Mindszenty and Protestant churchmen. Instead, the UN invited the two Soviet satellite countries to tell their stories of the imprisonment of the Cardinal and other clergymen.

THE RUSSIAN delegation indicated the two nations would disregard the invitation, since both Hungary and Bulgaria have contended the trials were internal matters and no business of the UN.

Tho world organization, however, voted 30 to 7 to put the church cases on its agenda and to go on with a full discussion of them.

U. S. delegate Benjamin V. Cohen argued the committee should delay inviting any nations or churches to send spokesmen until it decides how it wants to deal with the question.

Russia's Jacob A. Malik indicated the two Russian satellites would reject such an invitation and accused Bolivia of violating the UN charter by seeking to invite religious organizations.

To the casual observer, the entire matter was even less than a tempest in a tea pot. Whatever the UN might find as a result of rehashing the convictions of the churchmen—what could UN do about it? The force of UN in world peace retention efforts has been so meager as to cause critics to begin comparing it already with the old League of Nations which died of impotency.

BOND DRIVE:

Plan for Security

Kick-off speaker at the opening of the "Opportunity Bond Drive," in which the government hopes to sell one billion, 40 million dollars worth of U. S. savings bonds to its people, President Truman keyed his remarks to the need for national security.

HE PICTURED the bond drive as providing another opportunity for purchasers to assure security for themselves and their country. Among other things, the President said:

"We know that we cannot have a sound and secure nation unless security is the common possession of our people. Farmer, factory worker, banker, merchant, school teacher, housewife—all are buying security for themselves and each other when they buy savings bonds."

He added that "every bond they have bought has given them much more reason to feel secure about the future—their own and their country's."

THE PRESIDENT said the kick-off dinner was to honor three million volunteers in the bond sales program, and declared they would be joined by another 250,000 newsboys who would "ring the nation's doorbells, bringing the message of the Opportunity Bond Drive into 12 million American homes.

Top question plaguing bond officials was the recession in employment, lower prices and less consumer cash interfering with the bond drive's reaching its goal.

OASI COST:

In Billions

American taxpayers in covered employment would have to dig into their pockets to the tune of 3.75 billion dollars by 1955 to finance old age and survivors insurance under the proposals advanced by President Truman and his administration.

BY THE YEAR 2,000—when the program is expected to hit its peak—the proposed cost would have mounted to approximately 13 billion dollars.

This estimate, made by the Research Council for Economic Security, Chicago, is based on a report from the advisory council on social security to the 80th congress.

Of a labor force of over 60 million, OASI now covers about 35 million, or roughly three out of five jobs. Coverage is now limited to persons employed in industry and commerce. It is proposed that the system be extended to cover the entire labor force.

In presenting both sides of the question, the council's report includes a full page of pros and cons. Each side might be summarized as follows:

ON THE ONE HAND, if employees of commerce and industry are entitled to this protection, why not employees on the farm and in the household? If the goal of the system is to provide even a minimum of subsistence, benefits must be raised now to keep in step with living costs. An adequate OASI system will reduce substantially the heavy burden of old age assistance.

On the other hand, opponents of the proposed extension point out that of those excluded, the majority are either protected by other systems or are able to provide for themselves, while the lowest income classes are employed too irregularly to earn insured status under any program. If the cost of living is a valid reason for raising benefits now, then logically the whole system should be geared to the cost of living, fluctuating down as well as up. The bigger the system, the better the promises of bigger and better pensions.

COMPARATIVE BENEFITS . . . Under present provision of the social security law it is assumed the worker has 10 years of coverage. Under proposed provisions, however, monthly benefits would not be affected by length of time spent in covered employment. Chart, prepared by Research Council for Economic Security, offers comparison of present benefit scales with those proposed in the administration program.

ACCIDENTS:

Fewer Noted

Hope was indicated that the appalling toll of death and injury on U. S. streets and highways might be Russian who sank and brought in cil reported that 92 cities of more than 10,000 population went through all of 1948 without a traffic death.

The council reported that Medford, Mass., with a population of 67,477, was the largest no-death city last year.

Rural Housing Off

According to Senator Fear (D., Del.) some of the nation's worst housing conditions still exist in rural areas—a conclusion familiar already to many, many Americans. The senator's statement was made during a hearing by a senate committee on the multi-billion-dollar housing bill pending in congress.

There has been little talk of rural needs in discussion of the housing problem to date, although that need is as pressing, almost, as any other.

Lady Sheriff

Mrs. Barkley Graham, weighing only 95 pounds, has become the first woman sheriff of McCracken county, Kentucky, birth place of Vice-President Alben W. Barkley. She succeeded her husband who resigned to become Paducah's chief of police.

FARM SURPLUS:

May Hasten Subsidy

The administration's farm experts weren't being too subtle in a movement to hasten payment of direct subsidies to farmers. They were pointing out in the capital that an over-supply of pork and milk expected within the next two months, may require President Truman to ask immediate authority for such action.

SECRETARY of Agriculture Brannan said he already had discussed such a proposal with the President. At the present time the government is committed to support prices of those commodities by buying any surplus and taking it off the market. This is supposed to keep the retail price up.

Farm legislation passed by the 80th congress authorized direct payments to farmers for pork and milk, but this law does not go into effect until January 1, 1950.

Meanwhile, the agriculture secretary said consumer prices on pork and milk probably would fall if the administration was allowed to make direct subsidy payments to producers.

DESPITE much sentiment to the contrary, Brannan said his department has had a "quite favorable" reaction to the proposed farm program which, briefly, would let farm products find their own price level through supply and demand, with the government paying the farmer the difference in this and the support price in cash.

Congressional critics of the farm program declare its cost will run into billions of dollars and that it will benefit neither the farmer nor the taxpayer, because, in the end, the farmer and the taxpayer will be paying additional taxes to finance the program.

CANCER:

Progress Seen

The men in white who wage an unceasing battle against cancer caught a glimmer of hope—they felt sure they had discovered, as they put it, "what is for all practical purposes a simple, cheap and reasonably sure blood test for cancer."

THE ANNOUNCEMENT was made with the customary caution and restraint of the men who work with test tubes—"reasonably sure" was how they described the test.

But if they had made such a discovery, it was a great stride forward toward victory over the terrible disease.

According to the announcement, comparative studies at the University of Chicago of the blood serum of cancer patients and normal and other non-cancerous individuals had revealed significant differences that led to the statement of the new cancer blood test.

Report of the university findings was made by Professor Charles B. Huggins, who 10 years ago originated a new treatment for prostatic cancer which has kept more than 25 per cent of the victims alive and well for more than eight years.

DISCUSSING the new test, he said that tests on almost 300 individuals—equally divided into cancer patients, apparently healthy persons, and patients with non-cancerous diseases—proved positive for all cancer cases, negative for all normal persons and negative for all other tested, except those with lung tuberculosis and massive acute infections.

Inasmuch as tuberculosis and inflammatory processes can be readily diagnosed, it was explained, the test was not expected to confound cancer with other conditions.

KIWI:

Rare Chick

Nature lovers in New Zealand rejoiced. A sturdy male kiwi chick was hatched at the Hawke's Bay game farm, bringing to six the only known existing family of this nocturnal, flightless bird which was thought to be extinct until a few years ago.

The male bird spent 81 days on the latest egg before the newcomer burst through the thick shell.

That Nagging Backache
May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

COLONEL WINN'S NEW 'BEDSIDE MANNER' . . .

Derby Betters' Loss Will Be Medicine's Gain

. . . MAY SOOTHE MANY A TROUBLED CONSCIENCE

By H. I. PHILLIPS

MEDICINE AND THE DERBY

Churchill Downs, one of the oldest race tracks in the land, it is announced, is to be run for the benefit of the Louisville medical college. The Kentucky Derby has left many a man sick at the finish, but this is the first time anybody at the track thought of doing something about doctors.

The track is run by the famous Colonel Matt Winn, always a man in green, seldom a man in the red and now for the first time appearing as something of a Man in White.

The colonel is a smart, colorful racing genius, but up to now had not been associated with a bedside manner and a stethoscope. If you saw him with a little black bag in hand you were under no illusion it held pills, capsules or ointments.

—*—

It has never been recorded that he was coupled in the betting with "Dr. Kildare." Observing him as he watched the crowds pour into the Downs for the Derby, we never got the impression he was thinking about what to do for the medical profession rather than what to do for Churchill Downs.

—*—

However, it will be strictly O. K. to see horse racing advancing the cause of humanity. It will be a great conscience soother for Derby addicts. Their alibi for the long trip and the Derby hysteria can now be, "Can I help it if I want to see ambitious medical students get a chance?"

—*—

He will feel better coming back from the Derby, too. If his bangtail finishes out of the money, he will have the satisfaction of realizing that Louisville Medical college (by Matt Winn-Ballyhoo) "finished strong and will bear watching."

—*—

We can picture the wide influence of the school of medicine on the Derby, and vice versa. Churchill Downs will probably be redecorated in white enamel, with a nurse at every mutuels window and an intern in the hot dog stands. Fans will have their temperatures taken before and after photo finishes, stethoscopes will be used to detect suppressed tips.

—*—

There will be special windows where fans may get a sedative. And if his inside information proves cold, there will be heat treatments on the mezzanine.

—*—

"Ladies and gentlemen," we can hear the track announcer say, "the horses are on their way to the post to advance the cause of medicine and correct diagnosis. You have only five minutes in which to help a student get through college."

Similarly, Louisville medical college professors will be allotted official colors or "silks," classes will be opened with "Boots and Saddles" and on the day of exams there will be a morning line and late scratches.

Life can be wonderful! But we hope no student will be flunked for bad behavior at the gate and "quitting when challenged." And let's have no dean of the medical school thrown out of training for a "popped osselet."

LET US NOT FORGET

Grace Noll Crowell

LET us not forget the ancient wisdom
With which our fathers walked their earthly days:
The saying of grace above a loaf, new-broken,
The Sabbath rest, the altars we should raise;
The teaching of our faith to these, our children,
The earnest study of God's holy Word;
The telling, again and again, the old sweet story
By which an apathetic world is stirred.

Let us not forget the ancient splendors:
The mountain-top experience that lights
The darkest valleys that our feet must travel,
Where God will be, as well as on the heights.
Let us not forget the old, old meaning
Of the sun and moon and stars above the land.
Considering these—God help us to remember
That we, like they, are held in Thy great hand.

Star Dust
STAGE SCREEN RADIO

By INEZ GERHARD

WHEN Eagle-Lion films decided to hold the premiere of "Tulsa" in Tulsa, Okla., they had no idea that Oklahomans would cooperate so magnificently. Gov. Roy Turner proclaimed a holiday and royally entertained members of the press whom Eagle-Lion flew from both coasts for the occasion. Walter Wanger brought "Tulsa's" stars—Susan Hayward, Robert Preston, Chill Wills and Jess Barker, to town; 50 mayors from all over the state were on hand to join in the festivities, which lasted for a day and a half. As for the picture, it is fine entertainment, with an oil-well fire that sets an all-time high for similar screen spectacles.

Susan Hayward

Two top Warners stars began their careers similarly, by dying. Errol Flynn did it in "The Case of the Curious Bride," has been killing other people in films ever since. Zachary Scott died in his first film, "The Mask of Dimitrios," has been the victim in eight out of 11 pictures since then, gets driven to suicide in his latest, "Flamingo Road."

Reuniting Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers for their 10th picture in M-G-M's "The Barkleys of Broadway" proved so successful that they will co-star in another musical, as yet untitled, which is now being written for them.

Bill Conrad, the "voice" of CBS' "Escape" series, is a fine actor, but looks like something out of a grab bag; usually wears a sack-like pair of slacks, a T-shirt, sneakers and an old leather jacket. He wears that array on "Suspense," also when reporting to the picture studios; he was in "The Killers," "Body and Soul," "To the Victors" and "Sorry, Wrong Number."

The Fiction Corner

STRICTLY ANALYTICAL

By Richard H. Wilkinson

3-Minute Fiction

"THE TROUBLE with you," Barry said, "is that you're too analytical. Why don't you throw caution to the wind for once and marry the girl?"

Hugh sighed. His face took on that look of faintly aloof indulgence that he always conjured when Barry became critical. "You wouldn't understand," he said. "You're too impulsive to see what I'm driving at. Let me tell you, it pays to be careful."

"Sure it does. But it doesn't pay to be overly careful. How does Valeria feel about it?"

"How does she feel? How do you think she feels? When a girl's in love she knows enough to be careful herself."

"Meaning of course, that Val's mad about you and she's willing to wait until you get through analyzing and justify or compensate her shortcomings in your mind."

Hugh gestured indifferently. "Figure it that way, if you like."

"Wouldn't it be a shock to you if you discovered yourself to be wrong. I mean, if Val married someone else right under your nose."

"She won't." said Hugh confidently. "Girls aren't made that way." He stood up. "I haven't been studying psychology and human behavior five years for nothing."

"But is she gets tired of waiting and marries some one else in the meantime, maybe you'll regret it."

"Don't be ridiculous. Val won't marry anyone else. I know what I'm doing."

Barry let a fortnight elapse before he again broached the subject of Val. It rankled him, and he felt better to get it off his chest. "Hate to mention it again, Hugh, but Val seems to think you've been neglecting her lately. Can't blame her much, either."

"Cut it!" Hugh looked ugly. "I think you'd better let me tend to my own affairs, Barry. The girl loves me and when I get around to it, I'll marry her. Goodness, can't you understand that a man shouldn't jump into such things!"

"Or a woman either," Barry offered. "I happen to know Val was out with someone last night."

"Good. Comparing the someone else with me will be the best thing in the world for her—and me too."

Hugh was annoyed. Blast it, why couldn't Barry mind his own business? Why did he always have to keep worrying about Val. It was plain as day that he didn't understand women. Val knew a good thing when she saw it. She loved him and was willing to wait. She was smart.

VAGUELY HE wondered who the other man could be she was out with. It was sort of amusing in a way. Probably Val had merely told Barry that so Barry would tell him. Childish. Why, even a first-year psychology student could tell you that was nothing but a feeble attempt on the part of the female to excite jealousy in the man she loved.

Three evenings later Hugh's phone rang. It was Barry. He sounded far away. "Can't hear you." Hugh yelled into the mouthpiece. "Talk louder."

"I say," came Barry's voice, more distinctly, "that the thing I warned you about has happened."

"What thing?" said Hugh.

"About Val. About her marrying someone else right under your nose. She's done it."

"I don't believe it," said Hugh, feeling for the first time a queer sensation of alarm.

"I saw it happen," said Barry, "I was there."

"Good lord!" Hugh was suddenly very much excited and very concerned.

"You can't say I didn't warn you," Barry's voice said, growing fainter.

"Hey! Hold on a minute, Barry! Are you there! . . . Yes, yes, I know you warned me. Guess I was something of a fool. Who was it she married? This is terrible!"

"Me," said Barry, very faintly And then the line went dead.

Lacquer Finishes

Automobiles are no longer painted and varnished but are coated with a material, actually more durable than the metal it protects, which is in large part soluble cotton. Today's widely used lacquer finishes are made from cotton, corn, and air. From these basic sources the scientist derives his starting chemical materials, to which are added pigments and plasticizers.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Signs Bill for Extension Of European Aid Another 15 Months; U. S. Launches Bond Sale Drive

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Men Who Found Kathy Remembered by Mail

The men who dug for little Kathy Fiscus, 3-year old who died in a California well shaft, were being remembered all over the nation.

More than 2,200 letters had been received by the Kathy Fiscus rescue fund from virtually every state in the union. Mayor Clark E. Bell, San Marino, chairman of the fund committee, said the first envelope opened contained $1,020—an average contribution of $5.10.

Donations ranged from 10 cents to $50. It was pointed out that if the average continued, it would mean a total of more than $11,000 for the men who worked for 52 hours to reach the child who fell to her death 92 feet down the well pipe.

AID BILL:

Has Truman Okay

A bill to give 5.58 billion dollars to the European recovery program over the next 15 months— with one billion available at once—was signed by President Truman.

MR. TRUMAN, as is a quaint capital custom in such maters, signed the bill with several pens—eight, in fact. Even Mr. Truman, himself, was moved to observe jestingly that "this will probably look like a forgery, but it really isn't."

The bill which Mr. Truman signed allots more than one-eighth of the entire budget of the United States to foreign aid.

Mr. Truman, ever a meticulous man, carefully wiped the points of the pens, handed one each to seven witnesses to the signing, and kept one for Sen. Arthur Vandenberg, who was unable to attend.

THERE WAS a check and balance in the bill, however. With the billion dollars to be made available at once, aid could be kept flowing to the Marshall plan countries of western Europe until congress votes the rest of the cash later.

CHURCHMEN:

UN Asks Facts

The United Nations wasn't heeding protests of Hungary and Bulgaria against its consideration of the trials of Cardinal Mindszenty and Protestant churchmen. Instead, the UN invited the two Soviet satellite countries to tell their stories of the imprisonment of the Cardinal and other clergymen.

THE RUSSIAN delegation indicated the two nations would disregard the invitation, since both Hungary and Bulgaria have contended the trials were internal matters and no business of the UN.

Tho world organization, however, voted 30 to 7 to put the church cases on its agenda and to go on with a full discussion of them.

U. S. delegate Benjamin V. Cohen argued the committee should delay inviting any nations or churches to send spokesmen until it decides how it wants to deal with the question.

Russia's Jacob A. Malik indicated the two Russian satellites would reject such an invitation and accused Bolivia of violating the UN charter by seeking to invite religious organizations.

To the casual observer, the entire matter was even less than a tempest in a tea pot. Whatever the UN might find as a result of rehashing the convictions of the churchmen—what could UN do about it? The force of UN in world peace retention efforts has been so meager as to cause critics to begin comparing it already with the old League of Nations which died of impotency.

BOND DRIVE:

Plan for Security

Kick-off speaker at the opening of the "Opportunity Bond Drive," in which the government hopes to sell one billion, 40 million dollars worth of U. S. savings bonds to its people, President Truman keyed his remarks to the need for national security.

HE PICTURED the bond drive as providing another opportunity for purchasers to assure security for themselves and their country. Among other things, the President said:

"We know that we cannot have a sound and secure nation unless security is the common possession of our people. Farmer, factory worker, banker, merchant, school teacher, housewife—all are buying security for themselves and each other when they buy savings bonds."

He added that "every bond they have bought has given them much more reason to feel secure about the future—their own and their country's."

THE PRESIDENT said the kick-off dinner was to honor three million volunteers in the bond sales program, and declared they would be joined by another 250,000 newsboys who would "ring the nation's doorbells, bringing the message of the Opportunity Bond Drive into 12 million American homes.

Top question plaguing bond officials was the recession in employment, lower prices and less consumer cash interfering with the bond drive's reaching its goal.

OASI COST:

In Billions

American taxpayers in covered employment would have to dig into their pockets to the tune of 3.75 billion dollars by 1955 to finance old age and survivors insurance under the proposals advanced by President Truman and his administration.

BY THE YEAR 2,000—when the program is expected to hit its peak—the proposed cost would have mounted to approximately 13 billion dollars.

This estimate, made by the Research Council for Economic Security, Chicago, is based on a report from the advisory council on social security to the 80th congress.

Of a labor force of over 60 million, OASI now covers about 35 million, or roughly three out of five jobs. Coverage is now limited to persons employed in industry and commerce. It is proposed that the system be extended to cover the entire labor force.

In presenting both sides of the question, the council's report includes a full page of pros and cons. Each side might be summarized as follows:

ON THE ONE HAND, if employees of commerce and industry are entitled to this protection, why not employees on the farm and in the household? If the goal of the system is to provide even a minimum of subsistence, benefits must be raised now to keep in step with living costs. An adequate OASI system will reduce substantially the heavy burden of old age assistance.

On the other hand, opponents of the proposed extension point out that of those excluded, the majority are either protected by other systems or are able to provide for themselves, while the lowest income classes are employed too irregularly to earn insured status under any program. If the cost of living is a valid reason for raising benefits now, then logically the whole system should be geared to the cost of living, fluctuating down as well as up. The bigger the system, the better the promises of bigger and better pensions.

COMPARATIVE BENEFITS . . . Under present provision of the social security law it is assumed the worker has 10 years of coverage. Under proposed provisions, however, monthly benefits would not be affected by length of time spent in covered employment. Chart, prepared by Research Council for Economic Security, offers comparison of present benefit scales with those proposed in the administration program.

ACCIDENTS:

Fewer Noted

Hope was indicated that the appalling toll of death and injury on U. S. streets and highways might be Russian who sank and brought in cil reported that 92 cities of more than 10,000 population went through all of 1948 without a traffic death.

The council reported that Medford, Mass., with a population of 67,477, was the largest no-death city last year.

Rural Housing Off

According to Senator Fear (D., Del.) some of the nation's worst housing conditions still exist in rural areas—a conclusion familiar already to many, many Americans. The senator's statement was made during a hearing by a senate committee on the multi-billion-dollar housing bill pending in congress.

There has been little talk of rural needs in discussion of the housing problem to date, although that need is as pressing, almost, as any other.

Lady Sheriff

Mrs. Barkley Graham, weighing only 95 pounds, has become the first woman sheriff of McCracken county, Kentucky, birth place of Vice-President Alben W. Barkley. She succeeded her husband who resigned to become Paducah's chief of police.

FARM SURPLUS:

May Hasten Subsidy

The administration's farm experts weren't being too subtle in a movement to hasten payment of direct subsidies to farmers. They were pointing out in the capital that an over-supply of pork and milk expected within the next two months, may require President Truman to ask immediate authority for such action.

SECRETARY of Agriculture Brannan said he already had discussed such a proposal with the President. At the present time the government is committed to support prices of those commodities by buying any surplus and taking it off the market. This is supposed to keep the retail price up.

Farm legislation passed by the 80th congress authorized direct payments to farmers for pork and milk, but this law does not go into effect until January 1, 1950.

Meanwhile, the agriculture secretary said consumer prices on pork and milk probably would fall if the administration was allowed to make direct subsidy payments to producers.

DESPITE much sentiment to the contrary, Brannan said his department has had a "quite favorable" reaction to the proposed farm program which, briefly, would let farm products find their own price level through supply and demand, with the government paying the farmer the difference in this and the support price in cash.

Congressional critics of the farm program declare its cost will run into billions of dollars and that it will benefit neither the farmer nor the taxpayer, because, in the end, the farmer and the taxpayer will be paying additional taxes to finance the program.

CANCER:

Progress Seen

The men in white who wage an unceasing battle against cancer caught a glimmer of hope — they felt sure they had discovered, as they put it, "what is for all practical purposes a simple, cheap and reasonably sure blood test for cancer."

THE ANNOUNCEMENT was made with the customary caution and restraint of the men who work with test tubes—"reasonably sure" was how they described the test.

But if they had made such a discovery, it was a great stride forward toward victory over the terrible disease.

According to the announcement, comparative studies at the University of Chicago of the blood serum of cancer patients and normal and other non-cancerous individuals had revealed significant differences that led to the statement of the new cancer blood test.

Report of the university findings was made by Professor Charles B. Huggins, who 10 years ago originated a new treatment for prostatic cancer which has kept more than 25 per cent of the victims alive and well for more than eight years.

DISCUSSING the new test, he said that tests on almost 300 individuals—equally divided into cancer patients, apparently healthy persons, and patients with non-cancerous diseases—proved positive for all cancer cases, negative for all normal persons and negative for all other tested, except those with lung tuberculosis and massive acute infections.

Inasmuch as tuberculosis and inflammatory processes can be readily diagnosed, it was explained, the test was not expected to confound cancer with other conditions.

KIWI:

Rare Chick

Nature lovers in New Zealand rejoiced. A sturdy male kiwi chick was hatched at the Hawke's Bay game farm, bringing to six the only known existing family of this nocturnal, flightless bird which was thought to be extinct until a few years ago.

The male bird spent 81 days on the latest egg before the newcomer burst through the thick shell.

COLONEL WINN'S NEW 'BEDSIDE MANNER' . . .

Derby Betters' Loss Will Be Medicine's Gain

. . . MAY SOOTHE MANY A TROUBLED CONSCIENCE

By H. I. PHILLIPS

MEDICINE AND THE DERBY

Churchill Downs, one of the oldest race tracks in the land, it is announced, is to be run for the benefit of the Louisville medical college. The Kentucky Derby has left many a man sick at the finish, but this is the first time anybody at the track thought of doing something about doctors.

The track is run by the famous Colonel Matt Winn, always a man in green, seldom a man in the red and now for the first time appearing as something of a Man in White.

The colonel is a smart, colorful racing genius, but up to now had not been associated with a bedside manner and a stethoscope. If you saw him with a little black bag in hand you were under no illusion it held pills, capsules or ointments.

—*—

It has never been recorded that he was coupled in the betting with "Dr. Kildare." Observing him as he watched the crowds pour into the Downs for the Derby, we never got the impression he was thinking about what to do for the medical profession rather than what to do for Churchill Downs.

—*—

However, it will be strictly O. K. to see horse racing advancing the cause of humanity. It will be a great conscience soother for Derby addicts. Their alibi for the long trip and the Derby hysteria can now be, "Can I help it if I want to see ambitious medical students get a chance?"

—*—

He will feel better coming back from the Derby, too. If his bangtail finishes out of the money, he will have the satisfaction of realizing that Louisville Medical college (by Matt Winn-Ballyhoo) "finished strong and will bear watching."

—*—

We can picture the wide influence of the school of medicine on the Derby, and vice versa. Churchill Downs will probably be redecorated in white enamel, with a nurse at every mutuels window and an intern in the hot dog stands. Fans will have their temperatures taken before and after photo finishes, stethoscopes will be used to detect suppressed tips.

—*—

There will be special windows where fans may get a sedative. And if his inside information proves cold, there will be heat treatments on the mezzanine.

—*—

"Ladies and gentlemen," we can hear the track announcer say, "the horses are on their way to the post to advance the cause of medicine and correct diagnosis. You have only five minutes in which to help a student get through college."

Similarly, Louisville medical college professors will be allotted official colors or "silks," classes will be opened with "Boots and Saddles" and on the day of exams there will be a morning line and late scratches.

Life can be wonderful! But we hope no student will be flunked for bad behavior at the gate and "quitting when challenged." And let's have no dean of the medical school thrown out of training for a "popped osselet."

LET US NOT FORGET

Grace Noll Crowell

LET us not forget the ancient wisdom
With which our fathers walked their earthly days:
The saying of grace above a loaf, new-broken,
The Sabbath rest, the altars we should raise;
The teaching of our faith to these, our children,
The earnest study of God's holy Word;
The telling, again and again, the old sweet story
By which an apathetic world is stirred.

Let us not forget the ancient splendors:
The mountain-top experience that lights
The darkest valleys that our feet must travel,
Where God will be, as well as on the heights.
Let us not forget the old, old meaning
Of the sun and moon and stars above the land.
Considering these—God help us to remember
That we, like they, are held in Thy great hand.

Star Dust
STAGE SCREEN RADIO

By INEZ GERHARD

WHEN Eagle-Lion films decided to hold the premiere of "Tulsa" in Tulsa, Okla., they had no idea that Oklahomans would cooperate so magnificently. Gov. Roy Turner proclaimed a holiday and royally entertained members of the press whom Eagle-Lion flew from both coasts for the occasion. Walter Wanger brought "Tulsa's" stars—Susan Hayward, Robert Preston, Chill Wills and Jess Barker, to town; 50 mayors from all over the state were on hand to join in the festivities, which lasted for a day and a half. As for the picture, it is fine entertainment, with an oil-well fire that sets an all-time high for similar screen spectacles.

Susan Hayward

Two top Warners stars began their careers similarly, by dying. Errol Flynn did it in "The Case of the Curious Bride," has been killing other people in films ever since. Zachary Scott died in his first film, "The Mask of Dimitrios," has been the victim in eight out of 11 pictures since then, gets driven to suicide in his latest, "Flamingo Road."

Reuniting Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers for their 10th picture in M-G-M's "The Barkleys of Broadway" proved so successful that they will co-star in another musical, as yet untitled, which is now being written for them.

Bill Conrad, the "voice" of CBS' "Escape" series, is a fine actor, but looks like something out of a grab bag; usually wears a sack-like pair of slacks, a T-shirt, sneakers and an old leather jacket. He wears that array on "Suspense," also when reporting to the picture studios; he was in "The Killers," "Body and Soul," "To the Victors" and "Sorry, Wrong Number."

The Fiction Corner

STRICTLY ANALYTICAL

By Richard H. Wilkinson

3-Minute Fiction

"THE TROUBLE with you," Barry said, "is that you're too analytical. Why don't you throw caution to the wind for once and marry the girl?"

Hugh sighed. His face took on that look of faintly aloof indulgence that he always conjured when Barry became critical. "You wouldn't understand," he said. "You're too impulsive to see what I'm driving at. Let me tell you, it pays to be careful."

"Sure it does. But it doesn't pay to be overly careful. How does Valeria feel about it?"

"How does she feel? How do you think she feels? When a girl's in love she knows enough to be careful herself."

"Meaning of course, that Val's mad about you and she's willing to wait until you get through analyzing and justify or compensate her shortcomings in your mind."

Hugh gestured indifferently. "Figure it that way, if you like."

"Wouldn't it be a shock to you if you discovered yourself to be wrong. I mean, if Val married someone else right under your nose."

"She won't," said Hugh confidently. "Girls aren't made that way." He stood up. "I haven't been studying psychology and human behavior five years for nothing."

"But is she gets tired of waiting and marries some one else in the meantime, maybe you'll regret it."

"Don't be ridiculous. Val won't marry anyone else. I know what I'm doing."

Barry let a fortnight elapse before he again broached the subject of Val. It rankled him, and he felt better to get it off his chest. "Hate to mention it again, Hugh, but Val seems to think you've been neglecting her lately. Can't blame her much, either."

"Cut it!" Hugh looked ugly. "I think you'd better let me tend to my own affairs, Barry. The girl loves me and when I get around to it, I'll marry her. Goodness, can't you understand that a man shouldn't jump into such things!"

"Or a woman either," Barry offered. "I happen to know Val was out with someone last night."

"Good. Comparing the someone else with me will be the best thing in the world for her—and me too."

Hugh was annoyed. Blast it, why couldn't Barry mind his own business? Why did he always have to keep worrying about Val. It was plain as day that he didn't understand women. Val knew a good thing when she saw it. She loved him and was willing to wait. She was smart.

VAGUELY HE wondered who the other man could be she was out with. It was sort of amusing in a way. Probably Val had merely told Barry that so Barry would tell him. Childish. Why, even a first-year psychology student could tell you that was nothing but a feeble attempt on the part of the female to excite jealousy in the man she loved.

Three evenings later Hugh's phone rang. It was Barry. He sounded far away. "Can't hear you." Hugh yelled into the mouthpiece. "Talk louder."

"I say," came Barry's voice, more distinctly, "that the thing I warned you about has happened."

"What thing?" said Hugh.

"About Val. About her marrying someone else right under your nose. She's done it."

"I don't believe it," said Hugh, feeling for the first time a queer sensation of alarm.

"I saw it happen," said Barry, "I was there."

"Good lord!" Hugh was suddenly very much excited and very concerned.

"You can't say I didn't warn you," Barry's voice said, growing fainter.

"Hey! Hold on a minute, Barry! Are you there! . . . Yes, yes, I know you warned me. Guess I was something of a fool. Who was it she married? This is terrible!"

"Me," said Barry, very faintly And then the line went dead.

Mexican Indian Dance

Totonacs, an ancient Indian nation of Mexico, left important contributions of the quaint lore of that country before their high degree of civilization passed into oblivion. Their pyramids and temples have almost disappeared under the Mexican jungle, but their death-defying dance, the Palo Volador, still thrills writers and explorers who visit these modern heirs of a great civilization.

New Italian Stamps

Italy has issued an interesting and colorful set of 11 postage stamps commemorating the anniversary of the Risorgimento, the revolution of 1848-49. Pictured are battle scenes in various cities prominent in the fight for independence.

How We Licked The Parking Problem

For a while it looked like we'd have to put up parking meters. Folks working in town—including some of the store owners—were taking up all of the space along Main Street.

Farmers coming in to shop never found a place to park, and sometimes had to lug stuff a half mile or so. Some started to do their buying in other towns. Finally, store owners and farmers had a get-together—with the result that the empty field near the depot was fixed up for all-day parkers.

Now farmers get their shopping done comfortably, and the merchants have a better place to park than they had before. Just took a little friendly co-operation to make everybody happy.

From where I sit, most differences can be ironed out by just talking things over—maybe with a cup of coffee or glass of beer—and seeing the other person's side of it. Next time you have a problem or a little difference to settle, why not try just that?

Otter Tales

By... Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Who did I run into last week down by Sisseton but Cousin Bizzy Kilowatt! (Sometimes I think I got more relatives than you can shake a light bulb at . . . and they all want to write this column.) "Say," says Bizzy, critically, "I been wanting to electrify a little conversation with you."

"Go ahead," says I. "You can't shock me — I'm insulated." "Well," says Cousin Bizzy, "how come you haven't said anything in your column yet about Otter Tail Power Company 'hot line' crews? Folks are interested in how these special crews work . . . how they change insulators, repair conductors, install new cross-arms on poles, and do all sorts of jobs without shutting off the current — just so us Kilowatts can serve people without any interruption in service."

"For instance," says Cousin Bizzy, "it's quite a sight to see Louis Cole's crew in operation . . to watch Cliff Saunders climb a pole and poke a 41,600-volt-live-wire out of the way with a 'hot stick' while Harold Davis changes an insulator."

HOT LINE CREW IN ACTION

"Sure it's a sight, Bizzy," I answered, "and Otter Tail has more than one of these unusual crews. There's a 'hot line' crew headquartered at Harvey consisting of H. G. Swanson, foreman, and Lyle Ferguson; and there's a new one starting at Twin Valley. These crews travel around the Otter Tail system trying to locate trouble before it happens."

"H-m-m-m," says Bizzy. "Okay, now tell 'em about MY work . . . on the farm. I think lots of folks would like to know that 24,000 RURAL CUSTOMERS are now served by Otter Tail Power Company, either directly, or indirectly through REA."

"And while you're at it," continued Bizzy, "you better quote some figures. For instance, 18% of Otter Tail's generating capacity in 1948 was required to supply electricity to REA's. In 1937 — the first year REA bought from Otter Tail — they bought 20,000 kilowatt hours. Last year REA bought 55 MILLION kilowatt hours from Otter Tail!"

Cousin Bizzy jabbed me with his elbow. "Go ahead, Reddy; give me a break. Tell the folks how busy I've been, how hard I'm working."

"Aw, go get tangled up in a fuse box somewhere," I answered, "you just told them the whole story. I got to get back to work. With furnaces shut down for the summer, lots of people are putting in electric water heaters and I've got to keep movin' — especially between midnight and 7 A. M., when I work cheapest."

LOTS of HOT WATER makes for LOTS of GOOD LIVIN' — but I ain't so sure about lots of relatives!

Electronic Lightning Alarm

An electronic alarm that tips off lightning's tricks is reported by the South African Institute of Electrical Engineers. It was developed to provide added protection for those who work with explosives, particularly South Africa's gold miners. The device can be set to warn when lightning has shown its hand within a radius of seven or 20 miles, or when an on-the-spot-flash is imminent.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

Worker's Dilemma

Whether to ask for another raise in 1949 is a question now vexing our unions. Shall they go on through this year without asking for another raise? Some unions are saying it will be bad business for the nation's workers to insist on another round of increases. Others, recalling that raises have been obtained three years in a row, insist that labor keep it up and demand another raise.

How's the way to answer this $64 question, so that the American workman may have the $64—and much more? Because it makes sense that any sound gain made by American workers will be a gain for the entire nation, I favor whatever will have the greatest long range benefit for American workers.

Consider the Facts

People who have their facts straight know that any substantial rise in wages must be followed by a jump in prices. This is elementary fact-and-figure economics. If we could have another wage boost with the rise in prices it would bring—and the nation would keep on buying—that would be one thing. But there are strong indications that won't work again.

Pipelines of supply to consumers are beginning to fill up. The public is refusing to buy as it has for five years. Consumers are getting more price conscious. Many manufacturers are even now finding it hard to market what they produce. Some are already compelled either to decrease hours of operation or lay off workers.

Danger Signal

If a wage boost now would result in more unemployment and lower wages in the long run, would labor unions demand the increase? No, they would not. Yet that is exactly what would happen, if we should crowd the entire economy toward a depression. There are certain serious danger signals.

Here is a sample. On January 29 a Cleveland utility company awarded a contract for two generators to a Swiss firm. They cost $1,140,000 which was nearly $500,000 less than bids of three American firms. The Cleveland company had to accept the foreign bid, despite protests by American companies and by American workers.

The Safe Way

Now that Europe is beginning to get into the market, it will be seen that America has no monopoly on manufactured goods in the world markets. Competition there is just beginning, and it will get tough aplenty. Wage increases that push up prices, besides making more trouble just now in the home market, would make it hard for America to compete in foreign markets. Foreign production will also continue to invade our home markets.

Since living costs are already definitely going down, and since a wage increase would be very bad for the industries we work for, and would endanger our jobs, I'd say let it go by. If we can keep present wage levels, and let prices come down, that will mean a real raise for everybody. That way, not only union members, but everybody will have their standard of living raised a full notch.

4-H Club Has Many Projects

Enrollment of Minnesota boys and girls in the National 4-H Home Grounds Beautification program for 1949 is expected so increase, according to the National Committee on Boys and Girls Work. On, a national scale, enrollment has more than doubled in the last five years.

4-H Club members start out by mapping out the farmstead grounds and making plans for improvement. They learn to use flowers, plants, shrubs, trees and grasses in landscaping. Sometimes dad and mother lend a hand in the job.

For the 12th year, Mrs. C. R. Walgreen of Chicago is providing merit awards for 4-H'ers having the most outstanding records of accomplishment in the project. County winners will receive a gold filled medal of honor and the state winner a 17 jewel gold watch. Judged on a national basis, eight winners will be selected to attend the National 4-H Club Congreas next fall, all expenses paid.

Designed to help 4-H'ers understand food values from both health and economy standpoints, the National 4-H Food preparation program also develops desirable personal food habits. Use of home-produced food is stressed. Merit awards will be provided again by Servel Home Economics department. They are educational trips to the National 4-H Club Congress for state winners, medals for county winners and six $300 scholarships for a special blue award.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U.S. Seeks to Avoid Chinese War As Warships Flee Shanghai Trap; Reds Talk of Berlin Blockade End

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BOUND FOR "HOT SPOT!" . . . American marines wave from the U.S.S. St. Paul as they embark for trouble spots in China. The St. Paul, heavy cruiser, was one of the two warships leaving for China and which carried much larger complements of marines than normal.

The United States was showing the world that it planned no maneuvers which might create the situation for an "incident" leading to involvement in the Chinese war.

To the surprise of practically everyone, particularly the 2,500 Americans in Shanghai, the entire U. S. fleet fled suddenly from Shanghai, evidently having abandoned then current plans for evacuation of American nationals from the scene.

THE GOVERNMENT was sending some marines to Chinese troubled spots, but these were to do only sentry duty.

United States action came despite admittedly great provocation. The Chinese Communists, in their triumphant surge across China to Shanghai, had invaded the home of U. S. Envoy J. Leighton Stuart in Nanking and hinted he was to be held in custody.

Meanwhile, the Chinese Reds broadcast a demand for American and British officials to evacuate all their "aggressive forces" from China.

Already British warships had been fired upon and it was assumed American fleet elements had fled Shanghai in order to avoid any such predicament as was experienced by the British vessels.

THE COMMUNIST threat to Shanghai was increasing hourly and despite Nationalist decision to battle to the end, it appeared the city's plight was hopeless.

Communist victory in China would put all the western nations in a ticklish position. For, with the Reds in control of all China, those who opposed communism would be helpless and hopeless in event of a western-powers move to apply economic sanctions, if such a step should be taken. If this procedure were not to be followed, the western powers would be put in the paradoxical position of recognizing and trading with proponents of an ideology with which they were struggling in a cold war.

AUTO LABOR:

Flareup Looms

The nation's coal mines didn't present the only likely flareup in labor-employe relations as bargaining time rolled around in various industries. Those who were in position to know held the opinion that it was an "uneasy peace" which hung over the automobile industry.

UNION FLAREUPS had been quelled at the Packard and Ford motor companies and a temporary work stoppage had halted body production at the Briggs manufacturing company's plant.

The future of labor relations in the industry was as confused as it was uneasy. Recent action by manufacturers in cutting prices of automobiles had brought accusations from labor that the reductions were only "token" cuts, and did not represent a fair action on the part of the manufacturers.

However, with prices of other commodities beginning to spiral downward and easement of installment buying widened, it began to appear that labor would be in a vulnerable position by the time contract-signing time rolled around.

WHILE there was little in the press about the intentions of dynamic Walter Reuther, head of the United Automobile Workers' union, there was slight doubt that the fiery redhead would be in there pitching for his union members when the time came to sit down at the bargaining table.

Would labor attempt to overreach itself in bargaining or would it recognize the trend of the times and be content to hold present gains? That was the question whose answer would be anxiously awaited by the citizen who is always in the middle in such struggles—the average American consumer.

BERLIN:

Reds Want Talk

If the United States and Britain looked with a jaundiced eye on Russia's public offer to lift the Berlin blockade, it was thoroughly understandable. Too often the Soviets have held out the olive branch or made apparent overtures that never materialized to ease the crisis the Reds may have been developing at that time.

HOWEVER, the western powers had virtually accepted the Russian proposal to lift the Berlin blockade in exchange for a four-power conference on Germany. But it was made very plain that acceptance was based on the condition that Russia had no secret strings attached to the offer.

A U. S. state department official was quoted as saying that if Moscow's policy actually stands as it was reported in a dispatch by Tass, Russian news agency, the "way appears clear for the lifting of the blockade and a meeting of the council of foreign ministers."

At the same time, however, it was learned that the Russians were told that the United States, Britain and France do not intend to delay their plans for unifying western Germany and creating a German government, probably by July 15.

SOME TOP officials believed the Russian offer's real purpose was to delay this action, and indicated that if this were the case it was most uncertain whether a real and final agreement on the Berlin blockade would be reached any time in the near future.

The Russian proposal was construed as suggesting three concrete means for reducing international tension. These were outlined as (1) proposal for a meeting of the council of foreign ministers on the subject of Germany; (2) lifting the Berlin restrictions as soon as a meeting date was fixed for that meeting, and (3) direct negotiations between Premier Stalin and President Truman on basic conflicts beween the United States and the Soviet union.

FARM PROGRAM:

Who's Confused?

The administration's bold new farm program was becoming so muddled that even its proponents seemed to be less than certain of just what its purpose is, to say nothing of how much it will cost.

When the program was first presented, the general impression generated by its proponents was that it was a duality of beneficence, as it were—a device that would keep up the price of farm products while at the same time resulting in less cost to the consumer.

TO CRITICS who callously pointed out that it would require tax money to finance such a program and that both farmers and consumers would have to pay those taxes, the plan's advocates answered that such persons simply didn't understand the aims of the proposal.

Then along came Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan with a statement that indicated he didn't quite understand it either, or if he did, it was a new conception. Now, the secretary was saying, the plan wasn't meant as a consumer subsidy at all. No indeed, it was a farm price support measure, aimed at giving the farmer a "fair return" on his investment and his labor.

SPRING COMES TO ENGLAND

Nature Gives Weird Vent to Vernal Urge

It was spring in England, and whimsey and fantasy were all around.

For instance, cows got a license to kiss. A lovelorn cat set fire to a house. A thief, no doubt actuated by the season, stole two dozen love birds. A swan, winging majestically up the Thames in search of a mate, plumped on a bridge at rush hour and piled up traffic for a mile. Everything, it seemed, was in a tizzy.

The Denham town council gave cows the kissing license. It ruled that it's all right for them to nuzzle over the fence, even if one pasture is certified tuberculosis-free and the other isn't.

A Mikado pheasant, which usually lays eggs only in its native habitat in Formosa, laid six eggs.

CREDIT CONTROLS:

Are Eased Again

Developments were shoving President Truman's demands for price control power further and further into the realm of absurdity.

THE FEDERAL reserve board, after looking the situation over, decided that installment buying controls could be lowered again safely. And this it did. It set out that on household appliances such as refrigerators, radios, electric washers, etc., the down payment would have to be only 10 per cent of the cost of the item, instead of the previous 15 per cent. On automobiles, the down payment remained at 30 per cent; but on autos and household appliances, too, the time of payment was extended from 21 to 24 months.

THIS ACTION brought both commendation and criticism. That element in the federal government which would recoup all the wartime controls for the President, was aghast at the action, terming it dangerous. Others who had watched prices continue their downward spiral—especially merchants who were facing a buyers' market and difficulty in moving goods off sales floors—saw the action as a boon to business.

SULLIVAN:

Quits Navy Post

There was little else that John L. Sullivan, secretary of the navy, could have done but resign after the "multi-million dollar reprimand" he received from Defense Secretary Louis Johnson.

SULLIVAN, as navy chief, had gone ahead with plans to construct the 65,000-ton U. S. aircraft supercarrier, the United States, despite lack of congressional authorization for the project.

It was no particular secret that abandonment of the carrier and Sullivan's resignation were all a continuing part of the apparently hopeless fight to unify the nation's armed forces. The congressional act calling for such a step has never been carried out, and the navy's attempt to go ahead with building the huge carrier without any legal authority was another example of high-handed service tactics that have tended to make unification appear impossible of realization.

DEFENSE SECRETARY Johnson, commenting on Sullivan's resignation, said, "I regret very much that my old friend and colleague . . . has joined the aircraft carrier issue on personal grounds and I believe that he too will soon regret his action of today."

DAIRYMEN:

Will Push Sales

According to the experts, milk prices would be tumbling again this summer, but American dairymen wouldn't be cheering about it.

In fact, dairymen were getting set to launch a 1.5 million-dollar campaign to promote the sale of dairy products and, at the same time, wage war on oleomargarine.

Most dairy leaders were said to believe that a promotional campaign to boost consumption was the only way to check a nose-dive in milk and butter prices that has caught producers with their income down and their costs up.

In little more than seven months, according to a federal dairy specialist, dairy prices had dropped 33 per cent. Butter, which not long ago was at almost prohibitive prices, had dipped to the government support level. Milk prices also had been falling off a cent or two at a time on retail markets.

The federal specialist pointed out that domestic unemployment has contributed to the drop in consumption of dairy products.

Grown Up

Shirley Temple, one-time "Little Miss Marker" of movie fame, now is fully grown up. She recently celebrated her 21st birthday anniversary. The dimpled child screen star of more than a decade ago is the mother of a year-old daughter.

FROZEN FROG:

May Yet Jump

Dr. D. L. Albasio, of Angels Camp, Calif., was keeping his entry in the annual frog jumping contest on ice—literally speaking. He has to, because his frog, Lazarus, has been frozen stiff for an estimated 1,200 years.

The physician said he found his prehistoric frog frozen deep in the ice of Dana glacier in Yosemite national park and felt confident his entry would be able to jump.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

Linoleum Over Sub-Floor

Question: Can rubber tiling or linoleum be laid over just a subflooring and must it be perfectly solid?

Answer: Sub-flooring is usually very rough, and frequently it is put down with open spaces between the boards. A floor of this type is not suitable as a base for rubber tile, linoleum or any other type of floor covering. For best results a sheet of plywood or a hard fibreboard should be put down over the rough flooring to provide a smooth, rigid base for the floor covering.

Worn-Off Chromium Plating

Question: The rungs of my chromium kitchen chairs have become rusted. Is there any way I can clean them?

Answer: The best thing to do with worn-off chromium plating is to have it re-plated. If you can get the chairs to a neighborhood plating shop, you could have this work done. It would improve the appearance of the chairs very much. Cleaning off the rust can be done, but it will not restore the original appearance of the chairs. You can soften the rust with a rust-removing preparation, on sale in many auto accessories stores.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Dipping casters in melted paraffin before placing them under tables and chairs will keep them from coming loose so often.

When carpeting reaches all the way to the walls, use vacuum around baseboard frequently—moths love to lay eggs in such spots.

Use an old powder puff when applying shoe polish: it conserves useful cloth, does not smear fingers, and fits nicely into can for future use.

Try tomato juice to remove stains from washable materials.

Apply a thin coat of sealer to wire clotheslines to keep them from rusting and make them much easier to clean.

Wash fluffy pile bedroom slippers—using same method as for chenille robes, etc.—. Do not wring: squeeze gently and shake occasionally while drying: when dry, brush vigorously to bring up nap.

To squeeze that extra drop of juice out of a lemon, use an ordinary pair of pliers.

If cheese is too soft to grate, soften it a little more in a warm place and press through a coarse strainer.

Purse mirrors placed under individual candle holders are attractive insurance against dripping or spilled tallow.

Unused marshmellows will stay fresh after the box has been opened if they are kept in the bread box.

Mix odds and ends of left-over paint together and use to paint under-side of porch, steps, clothes props, etc. Before putting air-tight cover on left-over paint, pour a little turpentine over the paint. this helps against "skinning" or or drying out.

To give an illusion of greater size to a small room, paint one or more of the walls a different color; or, paint one wall and paper the others.

Camel Newspaper Campaign Features 30-Day Mildness Test And Big-Name Testimonials

In their present newspaper campaign for Camel cigarettes, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company features the 30-day Camel mildness test.

A similar coast-to-coast test was recently made by hundreds of smokers under the supervision of noted throat specialists. In this test, hundreds of men and women smoked Camels, and only Camels, for 30 consecutive days . . . smoking an average of one to two packs a day. Each week the throats of these smokers were examined by noted throat specialists . . . a total of 2470 careful examinations. And these throat specialists reported not one single case of throat irritation due to smoking Camels!

Each advertisement in this campaign features two outstanding personalities who are Camel smokers. One a famous "veteran" star in some particular sport or other activity who has been a Camel smoker for years, and the other a rising young star who has recently switched to Camels as the result of making their own 30-day Camel mildness test.

Among the outstanding personalities used in this series are Johnny Vander Meer and Gene Bearden, baseball pitchers, Willie Hoppe and Willie Mosconi, billiard players, Gene Sarazen and Lew Worsham, golf professionals, Gladys Swarthout and Virginia MacWatters, opera and concert singers, Cole Porter, composer, and Patricia Morison, singing actress and star of the new Cole Porter musical comedy hit, "Kiss Me Kate."

This current Camel campaign is also being featured on the Camel radio programs, which include the Screen Guild Players, the Bob Hawk Show, the Jimmy Durante Show, and the Vaughn Monroe Show.

Dealers throughout the country who have cooperated in this campaign by placing Camel displays in their windows and on their counters have reported new sales records for this favorite cigarette.—Adv.

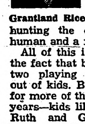
Where-o-where Are the Kid Stars?

By GRANTLAND RICE

THE NATIONAL PASTIME (slang for baseball) takes over until October 2 when football will be at high speed, outdrawing baseball two to one at that frosty date.

In the same way, enough sun has been drifting from blue skies to get a few million golfers out for another big campaign on some 5,000 courses.



Grantland Rice

Baseball is largely for the spectators. Golf is 90 per cent for the players. Golf still has the largest outdoor turnout for the players, barring fishing and hunting, which are strictly personal affairs. In fishing and hunting the contest is between a human and a fish, fowl or animal.

All of this is a slow preamble to the fact that both baseball and golf, two playing games, are running out of kids. Both sports are looking for more of the young stars of other years—kids like Ty Cobb and Babe Ruth and Grover Alexander—or such golf kids as Bobby Jones, Gene Sarazen, Walter Hagen, Francis Ouimet and Chick Evans who were stars at 20 and 21.

The fact is that neither baseball nor golf has the brilliant kids of 20 years ago.

Who are baseball's 1949 stars? Stan Musial, 28, Ted Williams, 30, Joe DiMaggio, 34. Lou Boudreau, 32. No kids have reported. It is the same in golf. Most of the stars include players above 31 or 32.

Sammy Snead, Lloyd Mangrum, Byron Nelson, Jimmy Demaret are no longer on the younger competitive side.

They are well over 30. Cary Middlecoff is close to 30.

But the point is there are no Ty Cobbs, Bobby Jones, Walter Hagens, Gene Sarazens, etc., marked against the skyline. The great kids of yesterday, for the time being, are gone.

In baseball they are paying bonuses from $50,000 to $75,000 for high-school kids who might finally be worth $2,000. Or nothing at all. You can't blame the kids, or their parents, for grabbing this sucker cash, the greatest sucker cash in the history of sports.

The two big leagues have invested over $500,000 in kid bonus players. They will be lucky to get $50,000 back in the way of value.

The age problem is even worse in golf. Such great kids as Bobby Jones, Walter Hagen, Gene Sarazen, Chick Evans and Francis Ouimet are now ghosts from another generation. Frank Stranahan, at 27, is the best we have left.

In both baseball and golf, the kid stars of long ago and now almost-forgotten years have moved into middle age. At least this is now where most of the headliners belong.

Golf's Leading Marvel

It was a matter of just 27 years ago over the well-trapped terrain of Skokie, Chicago, that 20-year-old Gene Sarazen won the open golf championship of the United States. I followed that final round. In the same year, Sarazen won the P.G.A. title at Oakmont.

Twenty-seven years is a long span in competitive sport. Yet a few days ago, I followed Gene Sarazen at the Masters in Augusta. He was hitting the ball better in 1949 than he was in 1922. He was longer off the tee and he was straighter. I saw good young golfers of 27 or 30 finish well in back of stocky Gene's wallops.

I spoke to Gene about this later. "You must be 10 or 15 yards better than you were at Skokie and Oakmont, when you were only 20," I said.

"There isn't any question about that," Gene said, with a well-remembered half grin. "I'm hitting the ball much better than I did when I was winning championships. I am both longer and straighter. I have control over a greater number of shots.

"Yes," he continued, "and I know your next question. Why is it I'm not winning? That's simple. There are two or three answers. One is legs. Another is ambition. The third is concentration. There is a lot of difference between your legs at 20 and 47. And tired golfers don't do so well.

"The only urge to win left years ago. When you've won the U.S. Open, the British Open, the P.G.A. and other titles, the old ambition of youth begins to wither.

You are no longer willing to take the mental and nerve beating. Even Bobby Jones wasn't.

"I kept playing but, like Jones, Nelson and others who retired, I found it impossible to keep concentrating through 72 holes, 36 holes or 18 holes. I can concentrate for a while, but not for too long. I miss a shot or two now and say, 'aw, what the heck,' and concentrate on about every third shot.

"A BETTER DEAL for Dairymen... A BETTER JOB for me"

"I like working with Land O' Lakes," says Henry Swanson, manager-operator of the Hinckley (Minn.) Creamery Association, "because we're both working for the same thing—a better deal for dairymen!

"Through Land O' Lakes, dairymen get all the benefits from marketing, manufacturing and selling. And we operators are relieved of market worries. We get help on production and management problems, assistance in our quality program.

"All these things help give the Land O'Lakes' patron-farmers a better deal. And I've found that a better deal for dairymen means a better job for me!"

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

How Would You Say It?

Curley Lawson's cousin from back East and a few of us got talking when he was here visiting, and I couldn't help noticing how different he said things.

For instance, he said, "Lifting that 200-pound bag of cement almost killed me." "You mean sack of cement?" asks Curley. (That's the way we'd say it.) "No," interrupts young Elliott who'd spent a lot of time down South, "He means a 'poke of see-ment.'"

It was good for a chuckle, anyway. Bag, sack or poke—we knew what he was trying to say. It just depends on where you are in the U. S., which way sounds right.

From where I sit, whenever we criticize someone for sounding funny to us, we ought to think how we sound to them. It's the same as choosing your liquid refreshment. I'm accustomed to a moderate glass of beer—you may like ginger ale—but who's to say the other's wrong? I'd say we're both right!

"I'm going to use Peavey 2,4-D Weed Killer again this year... ...it's the best there is!" says OLE SONDROL, Buxton, N.D. Farmer

"I sprayed 700 acres last year, in flax, barley, oats and wheat.

"We cleaned out the mustard.

"In one field, Canada thistle was very heavy, and two weeks after spraying you couldn't see a thistle, even though Canada thistle is usually hard to kill.

"I'm going to use Peavey 2,4-D again this year —it's the best there is."

(Peavey 2,4-D is an amine formulation. The amine form is recommended by all northwest agricultural experiment stations for crop spraying. We also have the ester form of 2,4-D for those who desire it.)

4-H Club Sunday to be Observed

4-H Members in Marshall County will observe 4-H or Rural Life Sunday, May 22, by attending the church of their own choice, assisting in the services by providing special music, furnishing flowers or acting as ushers, according to County Club Agent Neal Edman.

"On Rural Life Sunday, in keeping with the Heart H, it is appropriate that the attention of club members be directed to their own spiritual lives and to developing a spirit of service toward their fellowmen," A. J. Kittleson, state club leader at the University of Minnesota, said. The spiritual implications of the 4-H theme, "Better Living for a Better World," will receive special emphasis in all programs planned throughout the nation in observance of National 4-H Club Sunday, in addition to that in keeping with the traditional spiritual significance of planting time, according to Kittleson.

4-Club Sunday, or Rural Life Sunday, is observed by church oaganizations throughout the nation to emphasize the meaning of Christianity in rural life. It is closely linked with Rogation Days, celebrated for centuries in the Christian Church and emphasizing prayer for God's Blessing on the fruits of the earth.

When 4-H members assemble to worship God on 4-H Club Sunday, they join with those of many generations in seeking the blessing of God on the land, the seed, the cultivation of the earth and the enrichment of home and community life, Neal Edman says.

Holt 4-H Invited to Stiener

The Holt 4-H Club members, parents, and leaders are invited to 4-H Sunday observance at the Stiener Hall on Sunday. May 22 at 2:30 P. M.

Rev. Kronlokken of Thief River Falls will be the speaker.

The Stiener Club extends this kind invitation to our newly reorganized club, so let us show our appreciation by attending.

Special music and singing will be presented by Rev. and Mrs. Floyd Dalzell of the Dalzell Evangelistic Party. Rev. Dalzell will also speak. A girl's trio from Trinity Seminary and Bible Institute in Minneapolis will also sing and thrill your hearts with their music and song.

A hearty welcome to all to be present at this great service. Remember the date, Saturday night, May 21st.

The Floyd Dalzell's will also take part in the Sunday morning service 11 A.M. on May 22 in the Newfolden Evangelical Free Church.

This will be the only opportunity for the general public to actually enter the refuge area for sightseeing, and otherwise get an idea of Federal refuge activities.

Members of Sportsmen Clubs other Conservation organizations and High School science classes, will perhaps be especially interested in this opportunity to observe various species of wildlife, and refuge development work required to maintain habitat desired by such species as waterfowl, furbearers, deer and moose.

Refuge gates will be opened from 8:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Information as to refuge work will be available at the headquarters site in the form of small displays, posters etc.

Federal refuge regulations prohibit picnicing, campfires, and possession of dogs within refuge boundaries. Moving pictures or ordinary camera pictures may be taken if not used for publication or commercial purposes.

U. S. S. Niagara

In a naval battle on Lake Erie during the war of 1812, Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's flagship, "Lawrence," was shot away. The commodore transferred his flag in an open boat to the U.S.S. "Niagara" and turned the tide against the British. The "Niagara" later was sunk as obsolete under orders of the navy. In 1911, it was raised, rebuilt and taken for a tour of the Great Lakes, but sank in Misery Bay again. Under supervision of the Niagara memorial commission of Pennsylvania it was raised a second time and rebuilt.

Reasons For Paint Failure

Too much oil causes paint to dry slowly, become dirty and fade. Too little oil causes it to wear off rapidly. Cracking is caused by hard, quick-drying paints. Wrinkles show up because of improper brushing of heavy, oily mixtures. Chalking usually comes about because too much thinner is used or by skimping on the number of coats.

Plant a Tree

Few farmers and rural home owners realize the increased valuation they can add to their place by planting a few carefully chosen trees. The initial cost of a tree is not high —most of the value being in the years that have passed over its head. Consult a reliable nurseryman and have him outline just what can be done to improve the appearance of your farm or country home with ornamental trees. Unsightly vistas and encroaching neighbors can be screened off with trees and shrubs and necessary buildings hidden behind hedges of deciduous or evergreen shrubs.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Gen. Clay Out as Berlin Chief; New Rent Curb Formula Attacked; Taft-Hartley Bill Wins in Test

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BERLIN:

Clay Is Done

Gen. Lucius D. Clay, stormy petrel of American administration in Berlin, was relieved of his post as military commander in Germany. The action was taken at the general's own request.

CLAY, who has been widely criticized for his apparent "soft" attitude toward German war criminals, notably in the case of Elsa Koch, the "witch of Buchenwald," notorious German horror camp, had frequently asked to be relieved of his command. He said he wanted to return to his home in Marietta, Ga., and "go catfishing."

Clay's leaving would open the way for appointment of the first civilian high commissioner for Germany, something the army has been wanting for a long time.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN, in making the announcement Clay was to leave, said the general deserved the thanks of the American people for his execution "of one of the toughest tasks and accomplishments of American history."

It was no secret that the President and Dean Acheson, secretary of state, were trying to persuade John J. McCloy to take the assignment in Berlin. McCloy is now head of the international bank for reconstruction and development, a position which carries a $30,000, tax-free annual salary.

Pending the appointment of a civilian commissioner, President Truman announced military government deputies and two generals would carry on Clay's work.

The United States, Britain and France have agreed to arrangements for turning over civilian control to the Germans when a provisional government is established for the western zones.

Meanwhile, hope continued for an end, through four-power negotiations, of the Berlin blockade by the Russians.

HOUSING:

Nobody Pleased

The government, it appeared, couldn't please anyone in its efforts to implement the newly-enacted rent control bill.

Scores of landlords and tenants in New York turned out in angry confusion after Federal Housing Chief Tighe Woods announced a program for putting the new law into operation. Woods had come up with a plan which he hoped would provide owners of rental property with a "fair net operating income." This was one thing the new law said should be done.

BUT WOODS, in a personal appearance in the nation's largest city, stepped personally into a hotbed of landlord's inquiries.

Landlords assailed the Woods formula as giving inadequate relief to hard-pressed property owners.

The formula was confusing because it contained so many indeterminate factors. It was intended to produce a "net operating income" of 25 to 30 per cent of gross income on some 14 million dwellings throughout the nation still under federal rent control.

As Woods expressed belief both landlords and tenants would be happier under the new formula, a surprised murmur of laughter swept the audience which overflowed the 869-seat hall. Woods dashed from the meeting, where he answered some 50 questions, to a conference with New York's Mayor William O'Dwyer.

WOODS SAID the new formula "goes right down the middle, protecting landlords against rents that would deny them a fair profit and protecting tenants against being charged a higher rent than the fair net operating income allows."

Meanwhile both property owners and tenants seethed, each fearing they were being put upon by the Woods formula; landlords obviously resentful that specific rent increases were not allowed, tenants bitter because of a "mixed-up" formula which they feared held nothing but bad news for themselves.

One most probable result of the formula was that local governmental units would be disposed to let existing conditions alone without petitioning their governors or state legislatures for lifting of rent controls in their respective areas.

LABOR LAW:

Rough Going

If a big league scout were reporting on Harry Truman's performance against congressional moundsmen, he would have to say: "The President simply can't hit fast ball pitching."

And that certainly appeared to be the case. Mr. Truman had been to bat twice already. In his turn during the Mon. C. Walgren appointment to head the national security resources board, he had struck out. Next up with his civil rights program for a bat, he struck out again. Now, with his espousal of repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law, he was at the plate again and, with the house of representatives pitching, there were two strikes on him.

FOR THE HOUSE, by a vote of 217-203 approved the Wood bill which retained most of the features of the Taft-Hartley law.

Administration forces were plunged into gloom. But a coalition of southern Democrats and northern Republicans were jubilant. They were bent on retaining the Taft-Hartley law largely intact, and at the moment they were victorious.

The Wood bill would repeal the Taft-Hartley law on paper, but would re-enact most of its important features. For instance, it would retain the 80-day injunction in "national emergency" strikes. It would keep the present non-Communist oath requirements, but would apply them to company officers as well as union officers.

It would ban closed-shop contracts, but permit them in any state which took affirmative action to permit them by state law.

SPEAKER SAM RAYBURN had made a plea to the house for a compromise bill he put forward in an effort to salvage part of the administration's program, but his speech was in vain.

Whatever else congress might be doing, and whatever good or ill might result, lawmakers were serving notice on presidential candidates that campaign promises to enact or repeal this or that law ought to be conditioned, with the candidate making such pledges adding a word to the effect that those pledges would be kept "provided congress cooperates."

LEOPOLD:

Wants Throne

Disliking the common life, exiled King Leopold III of Belgium has made it clear he wants to return to the throne of his country.

THIS was made know in a letter to his brother, Prince Charles, Belgium regent, in which Leopold said:

"I am convinced you are sharing my views that the time has come for a return to constitutional normalcy." That would mean, of course, an end to the regency and return to kingly rule.

HOWEVER, the outlook for any such development appeared dim. Leopold surrendered the Belgian forces to the Germans early in the war and became a prisoner-of-war. His action in that respect was criticized by many Belgians. The ex-king has not returned to his country since the war. He has been living in exile in Switzerland.

NEW DRUG DISCOVERED

Anti-Allergy Medicine Battles Colds

There was new hope for cold sufferers.

An industrial physician reported that an anti-allergy drug has been found effective in controlling common-cold symptoms.

Dr. Halstead G. Murray said that 75 per cent of 494 persons treated during early stages of colds reported "they were cured or had their symptoms alleviated."

The drug, pyribenzamine hydrochloride, was administered in 50 milligram tablets at four-hour intervals at the onset of a cold. The drug is used extensively in the treatment of hay fever. It is classed as an antihistamine because it neutralizes histamine, an irritant substance released by the body in allergic reactions.

White House Repaired From Time To Time

Once again the White House is under-going extensive repairs.

The cornerstone of this historic building was laid in 1792, but the structure was not completed until 1800. John Adams was the first President to occupy it and Abrigail Adams reportedly dried the family washing in the still unplastered East Room on rainy days.

Legendarily modeled from the Duke of Leinster's home in Dublin, the building is 170 feet long and 86 feet deep. Popularly known as the "White House," it was painted white to cover the stains of smoke remaining from the serious damages incurred when the British burned Washington during the War of 1812.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS

Weddings, Graduations Should Be Considered As Ceremonial Events

IS THERE a graduation coming up in your family? Or, are you planning a bridal shower for a daughter or a neighbor? These are big events and should be treated with proper pomp and ceremony.

Some women get shaky when they plan to entertain because they can't see quite how they're going to get the house in spic and span order, keep the kiddies from getting underfoot while preparations are under way and still get together the refreshments.

Select a simple menu that can be prepared in advance, and you'll have the perfect answer to entertaining. A sandwich loaf and a cooling punch bowl are easy enough to serve. Make the sandwich loaf the night before; get together the ingredients for the cool drink and refrigerate them, too. When serving time arrives you have simply to bring things together.

For a youngsters' party, serve glamorized milk drinks and simple cookies, baked in advance. Or, give them sandwiches with the beverage because these, too, may be made in the morning for an afternoon party, if they are wrapped in waxed paper and refrigerated.

A glorious cake makes an excellent duet for a punch bowl. For a shower you might try a refrigerated type because women love them dearly and they are just a little bit more fancy than a baked cake.

Youngsters will come a-flying when you announce that eating time is here with these delightful glasses of cherry ice cream float. A chilled and nutritious milk drink, the floats may be served with cookies for an afternoon or evening snack.

* * *

IF YOU'RE planning to serve punch, make fruited ice cubes in advance.

Squeeze the fruit juices and place them in separate glass jars in the refrigerator. When party time arrives, simply put them all together in a large bowl or a pretty pitcher and the beverage part of your gay doings is well under control.

Orange Punch
(Serves 15)

- 1 pint orange juice
- 1 pint orange sherbet
- 1 pint vanilla ice cream
- 1 pint ginger ale

Beat orange juice, sherbet and ice cream with a rotary beater. Add ginger ale and stir thoroughly. Serve at once from punch bowl.

Fruit Punch
(Makes 1 gallon)

- 1 quart strong tea
- 1 cup lemon juice, strained
- 1 cup orange juice strained
- 1 cup sugar
- 3 cups grape or cranberry juice
- 1 quart water
- 1 pint ginger ale

Mix tea, fruit juices, water and sugar; chill. Just before serving add ginger ale and pour over a large piece of ice in a punch bowl. Garnish the punch with sprigs of mint, maraschino cherries, slices of lemons and oranges.

* * *

HERE'S AN IDEAL recipe for punch for the youngsters:

Pineapple Milk Punch
(Serves 6)

- 3 cups cold milk
- 2 cups cold pineapple juice
- ¾ cup coffee cream
- ¼ cup sugar
- 1½ teaspoons lemon juice
- Pinch of salt
- 12 drops peppermint extract

Combine all ingredients in a shaker or beat with a rotary beater until foamy. Pour into tall glasses; garnish with a sprig of mint and serve immediately.

Just the sight of these glasses of fruit ice cream float are enough to make youngsters cheer. The recipe suggests cherries but other kinds of fruit such as strawberries, raspberries or blackberries may be used in place of cherries.

Sandwich Loaf
(Serves 8-10)

- 1 1-pound loaf unsliced bread
- Butter
- 1½ cups ham salad
- 1½ cups egg salad
- 1 cup red jelly such as currant
- 8 ounces cream cheese

Trim all crust from bread. Cut loaf of bread into four lengthwise slices. Butter each side which filling will touch. On the first bottom slice place egg salad, top with bread slice; cover top of that slice with ham salad. Top with another slice and cover that with jelly. Top with slice of bread; wrap loaf in waxed paper and place a weight such as a bread board on it. Chill in refrigerator for several hours. Then unwrap and cover whole loaf with cream cheese which has been softened with cream and tinted pale green. Save a bit of the cream cheese and tint this pink or yellow and force through pastry tube to make rosettes to decorate loaf.

Chocolate Cake
(Makes 2 9-inch layers)

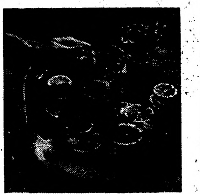
- 3 ounces unsweetened chocolate
- ½ cup hot water
- ½ cup shortening
- 1⅔ cup sugar
- 3 eggs
- 2 cups sifted flour
- ¼ teaspoon soda
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 cup buttermilk
- 1 teaspoon vanilla

Cut chocolate in pieces. Add hot water, cook and stir over a low flame until a thick smooth paste is formed. Cool. Cream together sugar and shortening. Beat eggs until creamy and add to sugar-fat mixture. Blend in chocolate. Sift together the dry ingredients, then add to the first mixture alternately with buttermilk. Fold in vanilla. Bake in two nine-inch greased pans in a moderate (350°) oven for 25 minutes.

Frost with chocolate icing between, on top and sides. Sprinkle with chopped nuts, if desired.

This chocolate cake may also be frosted with Seven-Minute icing and sprinkled with crushed peppermint stick candy.

To make a very festive cake, frost with sweetened, whipped cream and sprinkle the top with shaved, unsweetened chocolate.



A bowl of punch, decorated with slices of lemon, orange and sprigs of mint, makes an easy and festive way to entertain a crowd. Cookies, cake or sandwiches may be served with the punch to complete the party fare.

LYNN SAYS:

Simple Sandwiches Make Good Refreshments

Combine ½ pound of cottage cheese with a dash of onion juice, salt, pepper and two tablespoons of chopped cucumber or onion. This is enough for eight full sized sandwiches.

Cream cheese softened with mayonnaise, then mixed with chopped, salted almonds and a few chopped maraschino cherries make dainty little sandwiches.

Tried Cole slaw sandwiches? Mince the cabbage fine, and have sufficient salad dressing in it to moisten it for spreading. Add some chopped bacon for flavor and spread on whole wheat bread.

Mix ground leftover meat with finely shredded carrots and chopped hard-cooked eggs. Add enough mayonnaise for easy spreading and serve on rye bread.

Another filling that calls for seconds uses crushed peanut brittle with enough softened butter to make a nice spread for sandwiches.

Care of Floors

Question: A few months ago I had all the floors sanded, filled and varnished. I would like to wash them but have been advised not to use water, as it discolors floors. Please advise.

Answer: The manufacturers of hardwood flooring do not, as a rule, approve of using water on such flooring. As your floors have been so recently varnished, it should be fairly easy to clean them with some of the special cleaning preparations intended for this purpose. Or you can clean them by wiping with cloths damp with turpentine. Consult your hardware dealer. First take up the loose dust in the usual way.

Annular Eclipse

A certain type of eclipse of the sun is called an "annular" eclipse. In such an eclipse the moon appears to be slightly smaller than the sun, so that when the moon moves in front of the sun a narrow ring or "annulus" of light is visible around the moon. This is different than a total eclipse in which the moon completely covers the sun.

Why Name Calling?

The calling of names is a propaganda technique based on delusion and trickery. It has been common in politics for a long time, and has done its part to give politics a bad reputation among the people in general.

Americans are accustomed to a certain amount of this in election campaigns. But surely we have not come to the place where we expect it in the halls of Congress. In legislative sessions, when serious national problems are being discussed, it is a bit disturbing to hear so much name-calling. Any American has the right to disagree with another and to speak out his mind. But it is not necessary always to discredit those who disagree with us.

Freedom Is Fragile

The worst thing that has happened in America in the last twenty years has been the tendency to divide our people into class groups. Our country has long been known as the "melting pot," where immigrant lads and backwoods boys can become bankers and industrialists. High born or low born, rich or poor, in America it never really has mattered. The important thing in America is that a man may plan and live out his own dream.

Some folks apparently have forgotten that these freedoms of ours are fragile and perishable. Unless we attend to the keeping of each of them, it is possible to lose them all. The building of class consciousness is one of the very worst things we can do to our American life. It could be the entering wedge of all kinds of "isms," any one of which in time might well put us in chains.

Unwholesome Effect

The term "big business" is used as name-calling by unthinking persons and by those who have isms up their sleeves. Name-calling of business, big or little or any size, can have nothing but an unwholesome effect upon the American scene. A U.S. Senator was quoted in the press recently as saying: "It appears that big business would rather risk a continued inflation of prices than balance the budget through increased taxes."

You see, all the people of the nation are paying about a third of their total income in taxes. Must anyone who believes that taxes should not be raised be placed on the receiving end of a name calling campaign? One Senator on the Senate Labor Committee keeps branding as "fascist" certain of those who oppose increased taxation.

Public Opinion

Does this mean the Senators cannot make out a reasonable case for increased taxes? Does it mean that they can defend the case for higher taxes only by hanging ugly tags on those who oppose tax increases?

If we must try to turn labor against management—if we must turn the public in general against employers who are providing millions of jobs at the highest wages ever earned—then I am afraid we have reached a level that signals the end of our American way and our high standard of living.

Plant Corn Thicker to Increase Per Acre Yields and Reduce Crop Production Costs

CHICAGO—If you want to get top possible corn yields this year, suit your rate of corn planting to the fertility potential of your soil, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

Where the land is fertile and has a good moisture-holding capacity, you can average 14,000 stalks to the acre. The ears will be smaller with such a planting rate, but the overall yield will be much higher.

The higher yield from more stalks per acre means a greater turnover of your soil's fertility. Higher yields will lower your production costs and increase your profits.

University of Minnesota agronomists found that ½-pound ears give the most corn per acre. They averaged ears of this size when they planted corn at the rate of 4 stalks to the hill in rows 40 by 40 inches. When corn was planted 2 stalks to the hill in 40 by 40-inch rows, ears were much larger, but overall yield much smaller. Corn planted too thin does not give enough ears to make full use of the soil's supply of plant food and moisture.

Illinois and Indiana research men found, too, that the highest yields came from corn ears that didn't go over a half pound apiece.

The committee suggests these steps for maintaining the soil's crop producing ability:

1—Return all crop residues and manure to the soil.

2—Supplement with commercial plant food the fertility sold off the farm via marketed grain, livestock and dairy products.

3—Use tilage measures that keep topsoil and moisture at home. That includes contour cultivation.

Electrified Minnow Bucket

Minnow bucket has been electrified to keep the bait alive and "kicking" on long fishing trips. The bucket is equipped with a device powered by a six-volt motor, that provides the necessary oxygen-water mixture for the minnows. The tiny motor operates off the car battery.

Holiday Travel Caution Urged

"Don't let an accident spoil your Memorial Day week-end trip," is the plea of J. E. P. Darrell, traffic engineor of the Minnesooa Highway Dept.

"Highway travel is too often accompanied by serious accidents" warned Mr. Darrell. Eight were killed in Memorial Day week end in Minnesota in 1948, three in 1947 and ten in 1946. Many more were injured, some of them seriously.

Hazards can be avoided by reasonable precautions. Study the map. In many cases congested highways can be avoided making the trip safer and more pleasant.

Plan your trip so you can reach your destination at reasonable speed without becoming tired. Fatigue is responsible for many accidents besides the tragdies that occur when drivers fall asleep at the wheel. Excess speed becomes doubly dangerous in holiday travel. The other extreme snail gaiting, also leads to accidents.

See that your car is in safe operating condition. Worn tires, poor brakes, faulty lights and other substandard equipment that may get by on short trips often lead to tragedy on longer trips.

Take It Easy! Don,t mix drinking and driving. Keep your eyes on the road and your mind on driving. Don't pass on hills or curves. Don't weave in and out of traffic. Use courtesy, caution and common sense. A trip is not worth taking if you have to risk an accident.

Rev. and Mrs. V. G. Sorenson and family left Thursday for Minneapolis to visit and also attend graduation exercises for Mrs. Sorenson's brother at the Seminary and Rev. Sorenson's brother from Luther College in Iowa.

Caroline Aspelin had the misfortune of spraining her ankle on Tuesday.

Geo. Fricker received word on Tuesday that his father has had an operation and is not so well.

Mrs. Donald Rogers and son of Bellingham, Wn. are visiting here this week.

Homes Asked for 29 DP's

Mrs. Marlan Augustine and Mrs. Alf Movick of the Nazareth Congregation and Mrs. I. M. Pedersnn and Mrs. Henry Williams of Silver Creek have been appointed Chairmen of Lutheran Welfare, according to S. W. Solyst of Alvarado, County Chairman.

"With the help of these persons and others we hope to find a job and housing for 29 DP families in Marshall County" said Mr. Solyst. "Unless we can make room for one family in each congregation, many DP families will remain indefinitely in the prison like DP camps of Germany".

Hundreds of Lutheran War Orphans could be brought to America if enough good homes were offered. These children need permanent homes and will be available for adoption.

Mrs. Clarence Smith was called to Lankin, N. D. to see her mother Mrs. John Lapic who passed away May 15 at the age of 72 years. Funeral services were held May 17. Sympathy is extended to Mrs. Smith in her bereavement.

1949 Laws Available Here

There are 70 pages in the complete Session Law folder, 66 of laws, one of connurrent resolutions, 2½ of index, and a page of official identification. Weight per copy is 17 ounces. This year for the first time an official Session Law index has been prepared under direction of the Minnesota Revisor of Statutes.

During the lengthy session 1,665 bills were introduced in the Senate, 1,839 in the House, for a record total of 3,504 proposals. Of these 747 were passed by both houses and signed by the governor, for an all-time high. An even 20 concurrent resolutions were adopted. Chapter 295 is one of several brief measures, requiring only two lines of type; Chapter 264 has a seven-line title on a two-line law.

Longest two laws are Chapter 150, "relating to wild animals," which covers 22 columns; and Chapter 119, "relating to village government," which runs 22½ columns.

Longest title is probably on Chapter 505, 52 lines; Chapter 18 has a 17-line title on an 8-line law. Shortest title is on Chapter 522: "An act relating to ticket scalping." It may be significant of today's trends that at least 100 of the news laws have the word salary, compensation, fees, or pension in the title.

Come in and get a copy - free of charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Stienhauer and family, Mr. and Mrs. W. Wendt and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nohre visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Horien Saturday evening and helped Edgar celebrate his birthday.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Two Heads Are Better Than One (Or None)

I get a kick out of buying stuff down at the hardware store. And I always ask for a little advice from one of the two brothers who run it, because I know beforehand exactly what the answer will be.

Like when I needed a new garden hose. "Henry," I says, "how about this new plastic hose—is it really as good as rubber?" "Well," he says, "I'm inclined to think it is—but you'd better ask Tom."

I found Tom in back and asks him the same question. "Well," says Tom, "in my opinion it is—but you'd better ask Henry." "I already have," I says, "and when you two cautious old codgers agree I'd bet my life on the decision."

From where I sit, your own opinion is worth a lot—but so's the other fellow's. That's why I keep saying, over and over, let's be tolerant of the other person's point of view—whether it's on politics or farming—or whether you like milk shakes and he prefers a temperate glass of beer.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

New Roosevelt Political Dynasty Seen in FDR, Jr.'s Vote Triumph; Clay Urges Accord With Germany

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

ROOSEVELT:

Old Tradition

The old tradition was running true to form: you can't beat a Roosevelt. Young Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., most like his father in looks, charm and smile, won the New York congressional seat left vacant by the death of Sol Bloom. And he won it with the national administration and Tammany allied against him.

FDR worshipers were jubilant. Those who had fought the "champ" throughout his years in the White House professed to see in the election result the creation of a new Rooseveltian political dynasty.

Already the cry of the exultant victors was "on to Albany," New York capital which Franklin D. Roosevelt, four-time President of the United States, used as a springboard to the White House.

Denied the Democratic nomination, young Roosevelt ran on the Liberal and Four Freedoms parties' tickets in a contest which kept Manhattan's west side in an uproar for months. A surprise to many Americans, who did not know such procedure was permissible, Roosevelt does not reside in the district he will represent in congress. It seems that all the while there has been no bar in the law to prevent a candidate from living in one district and representing another.

DESPITE his victory as a standard bearer for two other parties, Roosevelt declared he is still a 100 per cent Democrat.

Campaigning, he visited thousands of voters, turned on the old Roosevelt charm, mingled with the masses in their homes, attended house parties as honor guest, made street corner speeches.

One defeated candidate sounded a familiar note heard so frequently during other Rooseveltian campaigns:

"The formula in this election was a glamorous name and a quarter of a million dollars, and neither of these did we have."

BARKLEY:

No Guards

"I'm a big boy now. And besides, who would want to harm a young man like me anyway."

Thus did Kentucky's Alben W. Barkley, Vice-President of the United States, dismiss the idea of personal guards.

BARKLEY, who will be 72 in November, goes where he wants, when he wants and flatly refuses protection of any sort.

He told newsmen that President Truman had "tried to get me to accept a few secret service men," but was turned down.

Secretary of the Treasury Snyder and top G-man J. Edgar Hoover also offered to provide bodyguards. But Barkley wanted his freedom. "I like it better that way," he said.

Barkley claims he's just a "common man, nothing fancy." In fact, he gets a kick out of people trying to figure out how to address him.

"I STILL call myself senator," he says, "a habit after 22 years in congress, but the kids call me 'veep.' I like that."

He could also be called Mr. President, since that's how he's referred to in the senate over which he now presides.

RADIO:

Godfrey Tops

Carrot-thatched, gravel-throated Arthur Godfrey, radio's chief exponent of the "be yourself" type of entertainer-announcer, led the CBS network in earnings during 1948. He was paid $440,514.16 last year by the broadcasting system for which he labors.

Newscasters didn't fare so badly, however. Lowell Thomas was a close second with $420,300. Oddly enough, the network boss, Frank Stanton garnered only a measly $109,798.80. All these figures covered income before Uncle Sam took his cut, so there was some difficulty in trying to ascertain just how much "take home" pay these gentlemen received.

For the ABC network, Don McNeill, emcee of the Breakfast Club, was tops with earnings of $180,229.40.

Paul Whiteman, ABC's musical director and vice-president, received $145,316.56. Again the network president ranked lower. ABC's president Mark Woods got only $75,000.

Last Man Over

Lt. Joe Russo, U.S. army air force, is shown holding a bouquet of flowers presented to him after he landed his airplane at Templehof airdrome to complete the last airlift flight before the lifting of the Berlin blockade.

GERMANY:

Clay Speaks Up

If Gen. Lucius D. Clay, retiring United States military governor in Germany, had his way, America's ex-foes would be permitted back into the company of democratic nations as soon as possible.

BACK in Washington where he was feted and decorated by President Truman, Clay warned that unless Germany is restored to the community of western nations, an alliance with Russia by our former enemies is inevitable.

Speaking to the house of representatives, the general declared that the German people, in spite of their recent history of aggressive war and "extreme cruelty," now had shown their preference for a government standing for the "dignity of man as an individual."

In the spirit of the residents of Berlin who survived through the airlift, Clay declared, there is a spark for German freedom that "may grow with the years." He told the senate how the people of western Germany had adopted through their parliamentary council a constitution which guarantees free elections and is "devoted to reestablishing in Germany the dignity of man."

WITHOUT referring to the Soviets by name, he charged, nevertheless, that the Russians have two objectives that were irreconcilable with the efforts made by the United States, England and France to create a four-power government in Germany based on international co-operation.

He defined these objectives of what he termed "the fourth power" as intent to exact the maximum in reparations from Germany and to set up a government that could be controlled or exploited by a police state.

COMMUNISTS:

Losing Ground

Whatever was responsible—the American airlift, a conviction that American democracy had more to offer or a general revulsion to all police states — the Communists weren't doing so well in the eastern Berlin elections.

THIS was in contrast with the confident predictions of Communistic politicians in the Soviet zone of occupation of an overwhelming majority.

The vote was being taken on a "people's congress" of 2,000 members, all hand-picked by Communist-controlled organizations and put on a single ticket. However, the Communists were picking up only about a third of the votes expected.

Some voters wrote on their ballots "we won't vote for a police state and we reject Communism." Early returns from Berlin showed a majority of "no" votes—the only way the congress could be rejected since only one list of candidates was submitted.

THE "PEOPLES' congress," if it were to be set up, would be the Soviet answer to the western state being set up in the western zone.

Objective observers couldn't fail to see in the initial trend of the voting an indication that in any case where American system and idealogies may be contrasted with that of the Soviets, the latter cannot command support.

TROOPERS CATCH TARTAR

Wild West Showman Defies Georgia Law

Many a man has had a hankering to do just what Col. Zach Miller did when he ran afoul of state police on a speeding and driving without a license charge. It happened in Georgia where the colonel and his driver, James Colbert, were riding the range at 75 miles per hour. The limit is 55. Colbert, it seems had no license.

Two troopers hauled in Colonel Miller, 71-year old Texan and boss of the 101 Ranch Wild West Show, for permitting use of his panel truck by an unlicensed operator.

Colonel Miller refused to stand trial. In lurid language he declared he'd "rot in jail," before he paid a dime.

The sheriff explained further: "Miller refused to stand trial."

ACCIDENTS:

Three Reasons

Plain stupidity, bad manners, and liquor are the top three causes of automobile accidents, accounting for three-fourths of all fatalities, or over 24,000 deaths per year, according to a case analysis by Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

By far the top killers are the "stupid" group of driver offenses—excessive speed, ignoring traffic signs or traffic officers, passing on hills or curves, and other miscellaneous "dimwit" violations; the study finds that one or more of these offenses is involved in 40 per cent of all fatal accidents, and is the principal cause of 32 per cent.

FOOLISH ACTIONS by adult pedestrians—crossing against traffic signals, crossing intersections diagonally, crossing between intersections, coming from behind parked cars, and walking in the roadway in the same direction as traffic cause another 12 per cent of fatalities, based on experience records of 1946, 1947 and 1948, the study finds. Thus 44 per cent of our annual traffic death toll results from failures by drivers or pedestrians to use common sense.

Bad manners, such as road hogging—driving over the center line or actually on the wrong side of the road, and "barging through" when the other fellow has the right-of-way cause another 15 per cent of traffic fatalities, the records reveal.

TRAFFIC DEATHS due to alcohol are estimated by the insurance statisticians at a minimum of 15 per cent—12 per cent due to drinking by drivers and 3 per cent due to drinking by pedestrians. This is the most difficult group of cases to measure accurately, the study points out, because: Many drinking drivers try to conceal such facts in case of an accident, and an unknown number succeed; second, a considerable proportion of other violations such as reckless driving, which are directly blamed for certain accidents, would not be committed if the driver were fully sober and his judgment clear.

Summary: Of our annual traffic toll of 32,000 to 33,000 deaths, 44 per cent result from acts of folly by motorists or pedestrians, 15 per cent result from bad driving manners, and at least 15 per cent from liquor. Total: 74 per cent.

SNEEZER:

150,000 Times

Michael Hippisley had sneezed 150,000 times and was still sneezing. London doctors sought frantically to bring some relief to the 14-year old schoolboy who had sneezed once every three seconds for nine days.

THE only time the boy hadn't sneezed in the nine days was when he was knocked out by drugs or sleeping.

"I've had kerosene up my nose, drops down my ears and hundreds of tablets," Michael told reporters. "Then they cauterized me. I couldn't feel anything any more, but I kept on sneezing."

When news of Michael's plight got about, some 50 callers offered sympathy and advice. One suggested hypnotism. Another said sneeze in a paper sack. Unfortunately, all remedies had been tried.

SCIENCE, making great strides with allergy controls and remedies seemed stymied on this case.

The Hippisley family doctor said that's what he thought it was—the constant "aa-chooing" was due to Michael's "abnormal sensitivity to pollen dust."

Cheats Death

Flashing a smile of victory over death, Reid C. Lewis, is shown in hospital at Santa Monica, Calif. His heart stopped after a minor operation and remained stopped, as did breathing and pulsebeat, for 12 minutes. His doctor, remembering an old Boy Scout trick which sometimes revives drowned persons by breaking a bone, snapped one of Lewis' ribs and the shock restored him to life.

PARKING:

No, Thanks

In a nation where parking space is at a premium, parkers were shunning a Great Bend, Kas., parking lot in great numbers.

Joseph Nolan, a short-time parking lot operator is authority for the reaction. Nolan opened his lot in the heart of the downtown district. In eight days his gross income was only and exactly $1.20. He tried every device he knew, even "free parking." Still they stayed away.

Deep Scratches on Mahogany Furniture

Question: There are deep scratches on my mahogany furniture. I tried using scratch-removing polish but without satisfactory results. How can I conceal these unsightly scratches?

Answer: A wood finisher could do the pieces over so that they would be greatly improved. When a piece is deeply scratched, a polish will not be enough to hide the marks. There are waxy sticks made for filling scratches in furniture, which should be on sale at your large hardware store.

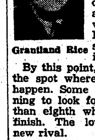
Mighty Casey Hasn't Struck Out

By GRANTLAND RICE



Grantland Rice

WHEN Casey Stengel came back to New York from St. Petersburg just a month ago, he was almost in a complete daze. He was listening to funny noises in his block.

He knew Joe DiMaggio was out indefinitely. He knew that Frank Shea's arm was out of kilter again. And then, in quick succession, Charlie Keller ripped a new muscle loose in his back. Johnny Lindell sprained an ankle. Snuffy Stirnweiss was ailing. Bob Porterfield snapped a ligament in his pitching arm.

By this point, Casey had reached the spot where nothing else could happen. Some experts were beginning to look for some place lower than eighth where the team could finish. The lowly Browns had a new rival.

But the Casey of early April and the Casey of today are two entirely different men. The staggering Casey of early April is the mighty Casey of late May.

> "There is ease in Casey's manner and a sneer on Casey's lips.
> There is scorn in Casey's bearing as he moves his swinging hips.
> And when he looks around the field to call his rival's bluff
> Not a rooter in the place can doubt that Casey knows his stuff."

In any event young Jerry Coleman, at second, suddenly turned into a star. So did young Dick Kryhoski at first. His pitching staff became the best in either league, and his batsmen started ripping the cover off the ball. Above all, when something was needed, Tommy Henrich would hit a home run or a triple or make a killing play in the outfield. Bobby Brown and Billy Johnson began driving in runs.

Who would have said on the 17th of April that the Yankees would be something like six games ahead of the Red Sox on May 10?

As one Yankee veteran explained it, "When our batters fall down our pitchers step in. When our pitchers blow, our batters come to life. But most of the time, both our pitchers and our batters are on the job, delivering together."

This latter seems to be most of the answer. The Yankees always had good pitching. But it is even better than it looked to be. A staff that carries Vic Roschi, Bob Porterfield, Tommy Byrne, Allie Reynolds, Joe Page, etc., is a standout.

This doesn't mean the Yankees are due to break up the American league. But it does mean they are a far stronger ball club than any one thought they would be. They can hit and field and they have able pitching. And they have, in manager Stengel, a leader who no longer fears to look fate in the face.

Casey would have received his share of razzing if the team had blown up. Why not slip him the loud huzzas for his place in the standings today?

* * *

Early Checkup

May is still too early in the campaign to start any checking.

The big surprise in the National league has been Giant pitching, especially Hartung's pitching. Durocher's staff has more than held its own. The team has also been hitting.

So far, no club has settled down to any consistent play. The pitching has been spotty. The Dodgers have held their own more through speed and youth than through expected good pitching. The team is also hitting better than it figured to hit.

The Giants have been up around the front even with Larry Jansen, their star pitcher, off to a ragged start. He is due to be much better from now on.

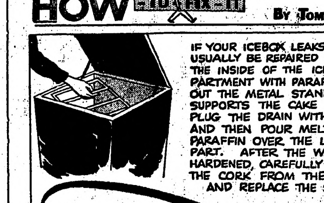
The National league race has proved to be as even as it figured from the start. At the end of the third week of the season, a gap of only four games separates the eight clubs. The Pirates and Cardinals are due to move up with long home visits ahead. Especially the Pirates.

The slump of Johnny Sain has cut heavily into the Braves' shot at a good early lead. Like Jansen, he got away badly, but you can't rate him that far down.

Washington, after a ragged start, has bounded back in the American League with a spectacular rush. Chicago's White Sox have been a big improvement over expected doom. You will see the Red Sox and Athletics start moving soon.

HOW TO FIX-IT

By TOM GREGORY



IF YOUR ICEBOX LEAKS, IT CAN USUALLY BE REPAIRED BY COATING THE INSIDE OF THE ICE COMPARTMENT WITH PARAFFIN. TAKE OUT THE METAL STAND THAT SUPPORTS THE CAKE OF ICE, PLUG THE DRAIN WITH A CORK, AND THEN POUR MELTED PARAFFIN OVER THE LEAKY PART. AFTER THE WAX HAS HARDENED, CAREFULLY REMOVE THE CORK FROM THE DRAIN AND REPLACE THE STAND.

New Plastic Foam Used in Insulation

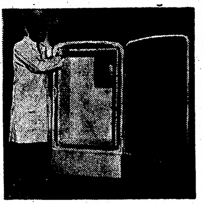
Material Is Called Lightest of Solids

The world's lightest solid an amazing plastic foam that swells up when baked like a cake to 100 times its original volume—has been developed by Westinghouse scientist for use as a new insulating material.

The new product is expected to find its way into many uses in appliances used in farm homes and about the farm.

Even lighter than some gases, the new material weighs from 10 to 20 times less than the fluffy meringue on a well-baked pie.

Robert F. Sterling, 29-year-old chemist, and the man chiefly responsible for the new product, said it is the result of a three-year search for an effective insulating material that will fill large areas, yet weigh "next to nothing."



Shown here is a refrigerator completely insulated with the new plastic - foam insulation material. This is the way the refrigerator looked after the insulation job was done, but before door liner and other parts were put back in place.

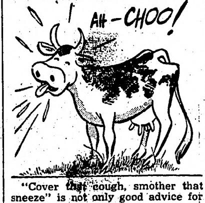
The foam is made by heating a molasses-like synthetic resin at about 350 degrees Fahrenheit until it expands to 100 times its original volume, then solidifies. Thousands of gas bubbles entrapped in the foam "buoy" it up and give the plastic its lightness.

Foamed into pre-fabricated metal wall sections, a two-inch thick layer weighing only 300 pounds would be enough to insulate a complete six-room house, Sterling said.

Resistant to fire, moisture, fungus growth and insects, the foam is low enough in cost to be practical for many applications and uses, the scientist said.

Not only do imprisoned air bubbles give the new plastic great lightness, but they also provide it with its excellent insulating qualities. So-called "dead air" is one of the best insulators known among commonly available materials, Sterling said.

Cover That Cough



"Cover that cough, smother that sneeze" is not only good advice for people in public places. It has practical meaning in the cowbarn, too.

Danger that coughing cattle may spread respiratory infections to their stablemates is highlighted in a research report from the American Veterinary Medical association.

The report describes an unusual case of tuberculosis of the eye in a heifer. A tuberculosis cow with a bad cough, stanchioned next to the heifer, is believed to have spread the disease.

AVMA points out that this case occurred in England, where bovine tuberculosis is widespread. Although tuberculosis has been reduced to a minimum in United States herds, coughers and sneezers are nevertheless a menace because they may spread all kinds of respiratory infections. Isolation of any animal showing respiratory symptoms is urged, therefore, to protect the rest of the herd.

Field Mice Destructive To Melon Crops, Seed

Untold damage is done each year to cucumber, cantaloupe and watermelon fields by mice destroying the seed which are planted and also the plants which are up and bearing fruit. H. A. Bowers, Clemson college crop specialist, says.

Bowers explained that the meadow mouse destroys the seed after they are planted, and the pine mouse cuts off the plants at the ground.

Roughage Cuts Bloat Danger

Marshall County diary men can reduce bloat danger by feeding cattle some roughage before turning them on early legume pasture, county Agent Forbes advised this week.

Dry hay in the cow's diet helps two ways in cutting down trouble from bloat he said. She won't eat so much soft, inmature alfalfa or clover and the roughage helps get rid of the gas normally.

Coarse dry hay or straw helps by making the animal belch as gas is formed. Immature legumes are too soft to irritate the ~~rumen wall.~~

Sellers has other suggestions for controlling bloat until legume pastures are past the early bloom stage. They are:

Pasture the herd overnight on coarse grass, such as sudan grass

2. Graze legumes only a short time each day until the cows get used to the change in diet.

Seller says a mild case of bloat may sometimes be relieved by standing the animal on a steep incline with the front feet higher than the rear.

Call a veterinarian to severe cases. He can use a stomach tube to let the gas out and get a drenching solution in to stop further fermentation.

Sticking a cow should be the last resort, according to sellers. If it is necessary puncture the paunch just ahead of an just below the left hip bone. Be sure to disinfect your hands, the knife or trocar and the area to be punctured.

Home of "Big Ones"

Giant swordfish and fighting bluefin tuna, taxing the scales at 700 pounds, have been taken within sight of land along the coast from Asbury Park to Cape May, N. J. Tuna and marlin also are caught along the coast from the banks and bars near many Jersey ports and fishing villages.

Heavy Rains Damage Crops

Heavy cloudbursts of rain on Sunday and again on Tuesday afternoon and evening damaged crops in this area to the extent that some farmers report total loss of their grain crops while some expect that part of their crop will come thru.

On Monday motorboat rides were given on the field belonging to H. Moberg.

The water did much damage to roads in this area running over in many places.

County Commissioner Bjertness of Grygla along with other commissioners and county engineers were here on Wednesday looking over the drainage problem here and make recommendations as to what can be done to improve the situation.

LOOKING AHEAD

A Task for Truman

President Truman has before him one of the greatest opportunities that any president has had during the first half of our century. Oddly enough, this chance of the century comes to the President through the foresight and statesmanship of the 80th Congress that last year absorbed so much punishment, politically, from Mr. Truman. It was the 80th Congress that set up the Hoover Commission on government reorganization.

Nobody's Fault

Our only living ex-president gladly accepted the job of guiding the "task force" of experts through some 19 months of detailed investigation. Mr. Hoover has played well the role of public servant in past crises. This time he accepted the task as chairman of the Commission, believing it to be his last opportunity for important public service. At this writing, 18 "task force" reports have been sent to Congress. Only the final summary report remains to be made.

The work of the Commission is so important that it must be placed above all politics. Like Mr. Hoover says, it's nobody's fault that our government has got itself all tied up in knots, with inefficiency the general rule. Government "just growed" that way, Topsy-like. It is definitely not a political, not a party, question.

Support Needed

Every one of us will be to blame, though, if we fail to get squarely behind both President Truman and the Congress and stay there pushing until this job of reorganization is done.

The tendency, naturally, is to let it go. Yet, right now, when the nation is faced with such tremendous expenditures of public money at home and abroad, it is downright foolish not to practice economy. Estimates show that recommendations of the Hoover Commission would mean a yearly saving to taxpayers of more than 3 billion dollars. I feel confident the savings could be larger than that. If real efficiency and economy is to become the rule of the federal government, the people will have to support it.

Way to Survival

Time is running short. Our sprawling bureaucracy will not of itself change its habits. Instead, if left alone to grow, expand, and mushroom as it will, our financial burdens will never cease. The latest report of the Hoover Commission deals with government agencies that are engaged in business enterprise. It catalogs more than 100 concerns of substantial size that are owned or controlled by the government. Large sums could be saved, according to the Commission, by cutting this number by almost one-third.

It is evident that unless we do put our government house in order, there is no way for this republic to survive. As burdens of supporting huge and wasteful government grow in magnitude, we endanger the whole financial structure of the nation. Moreover, with continued growth of big government, we can arrive at state socialism some day without ever having voted for it. It's hard to believe, but already one of every six adult Americans receives regular checks from Uncle Sam!

1949 Laws Available Here

There are 70 pages in the complete Session Law folder, 66 of laws, one of connurrent resolutions, 2½ of index, and a page of official identification. Weight per copy is 17 ounces. This year for the first time an official Session Law index has been prepared under direction of the Minnesota Revisor of Statutes.

During the lengthy session 1,665 bills were introduced in the Senate, 1,839 in the House, for a record total of 3,504 proposals. Of these 747 were passed by both houses and signed by the governor, for an all-time high. An even 20 concurrent resolutions were adopted. Chapter 295 is one of several brief measures, requiring only two lines of type; Chapter 264 has a seven-line title on a two-line law.

Longest two laws are Chapter 150, "relating to wild animals," which covers 22 columns; and Chapter 119, "relating to village government," which runs 22½ columns.

Longest title is probably on Chapter 505, 52 lines; Chapter 18 has a 17-line title on an 8-line law. Shortest title is on Chapter 522: "An act relating to ticket scalping." It may be significant of today's trends that at least 100 of the news laws have the word salary, compensation, fees, or pension in the title.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

Building A Basement Room

Question: We have a project in mind and I am able to do the work myself if I have a little help. We want to dig out a basement under the kitchen; we have two rooms under the house already. Have you any leaflets on tiling out the drain, and footings for concrete blocks? After the basement room is completed, we plan on a kitchen sink and cupboards. Have you any leaflets on plumbing for a kitchen?

Answer: Those are all rather large subjects, and I do not have any leaflets to cover them. If there is a good public library in your town, you should find handbooks on plumbing and piping on file. Other sources of information are the publishing house of Theodore Audel & Company, 49 West 23rd St., New York; also the Popular Mechanics Magazine, 200 East Ontario St., Chicago. The Portland Cement Association, 33 West Grand Ave., Chicago, can supply bulletins on concrete work around the house.

New Gasoline Process

The nation's transportation industries, worried by the current gasoline shortage, have been assured of an abundant supply of liquid fuel at reasonable cost when sufficient plants are placed in operation to use a new synthetic process from natural gas. However, this source of supply is not expected to be widely used for several years.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Russian Motives Puzzle Diplomats As Berlin Blockade Comes to End; U. S. Spending Widely Criticized

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

BRAUNSCHWEIG

BLOCKADE LIFT PREPARATIONS . . . Preparations to get things ready for the Russian lift of the Berlin blockade went busily ahead as agreements between the occupation powers fixed the time. Photos above show workers getting trains ready to operate under regulations fixed by the Soviets—rules which will permit 16 freight trains to operate daily into the city. Efficacy of the U.S. airlift in supplying Berlin with needed supplies despite the blockade was given major credit for the Reds' decision to end the road block.

BERLIN:

Up The Barriers

What had really impelled the Russians to lift the Berlin blockade, and how would the action affect world peace?

Those were two top questions actuating western power diplomats as a semblance of peace was restored to the troubled Berlin sector of Germany and the U.S. airlift eased off.

MANY OBSERVERS professed to see in the Russian action proof that the U.S. airlift operations had shown the Soviets so decisively the futility of maintaining the blockade, that even the obtuse easterners finally had seen the light.

There were others who insisted the blockade lift decision was motivated by a hope within the Kremlin that such an action would delay formation of a German people's government. However, this did not seem a tenable theory, inasmuch as the western powers already had declared plans to go ahead with such a project.

Seekers of peace attempted to see in the decision evidence that Russia really did not mean to make war now and that some as-yet-obscure motive looking toward continuation of Red expansion without recourse to arms was really behind the move.

SINCE MOSCOW'S original announcement concerning the end to the blockade, the order was broadened. Restoration of "transport, trade and communications" services was directed.

The order permitted 16 freight trains a day to move into Berlin, restored highway traffic, waived previous Soviet claims to search Allied baggage, and demanded Soviet travel permits at certain check points. Mail service was also to be restored. Actually, the Soviet order restored the Berlin situation to what it was on March 1, 1948.

Both British and Americans moved in reinforcements for the small units at border points to check papers of travelers and hotels and rooming houses had filled with persons waiting for the barriers to be raised.

PARROT:

Pretty Smart

Lorchen the parrot is a pretty smart bird.

HE LIVES in the Stamp & Coin Shop on Times Square in New York.

A customer tried to enter the store, but found the door locked.

However, as he turned away he heard Lorchen's insistent screams: "Let me out! Goodbye, goodbye."

Intrigued, the customer listened closer, heard muffled moans from inside the shop.

He SUMMONED a building superintendent who opened the door and found Gustave Moerz, 50, the parrot's owner and shop proprietor, bound in a chair by tape and wire. His mouth was taped.

Moerz told police two men broke into the shop, tied him and took $644 from a safe and $100 from his pockets.

Nuclear Scientist Gives Definition of His Kind

In Baltimore, nuclear scientist Robert D. Fowler, of Johns Hopkins University, gave this definition of a nuclear scientist to a group of government officials at a symposium:

A man standing in a field in absolute darkness with thousands of baseballs on the ground around him. Somewhere in the field, invisible to him, is a barn with but one window and some kind of animals inside.

The man picks up a ball and throws it in any direction. If, by some chance, it goes through the barn window and hits the animal, then bounces out again so that the man can catch it in the darkness—he attempts to identify the animal by smelling the ball.

That is something like a nuclear scientist practicing nuclear science.

SPENDING:

Slash Urged

Suggestions that U.S. spending might be curtailed somewhat were coming from several quarters. Latest source was President Truman's economic advisers who held the idea that some existing tax burdens might be lightened and that the administration might scale down its call for four billion dollars in new levies.

THE COUNCIL of economic advisers, whose function is to counsel with the President on fiscal matters as they affect finance and economics, was reported to feel that current business trends justify an early check on federal spending—that is, if the budget is to be brought anywhere near to a balance.

It was the council's opinion that such levies as taxes on the transportation of goods add to the business costs and consumer prices and impede an orderly withdrawal from the postwar business boom.

The council was more than cool to any extended public works program—indicating its opinion by refraining from making any such recommendations in its report. The advisers have consistently urged that local governments prepare "shelves" of public-works blueprints for use when needed to bolster employment and public purchasing power.

BUT THE PRESENT trend of the national economy—which council chairman Edwin G. Nourse called a "healthy disinflation"—does not warrant large-scale works spending now, the council said. Such outlays would make it harder to reach the goal of lower government costs.

After a White House visit, Nourse informed newsmen that the council expects "some further easing of living costs." Prices, he said, are continuing downward, but "not on a demoralizing basis and there is no need to dig into the storm cellars."

PEEK INTO FUTURE

Scientist Sees Eggless, Meatless World

A meatless, eggless world . . . earthenware houses . . . pyjamas that may be eaten . . . atom-powered trains . . . food from lumber. All that and more is one man's prediction for the future.

He is Prof. Eugene C. Rochow of Harvard, who has been awarded a $1,000 prize for research on sand derivatives.

Professor Rochow indicated his conclusions are inevitable. Man, he said, must stop eating up his resources and, instead, turn to chemistry. That's when he gave out with the meatless, eggless world theory, taking the position that these items must disappear from man's diet because the fowls and animals producing them eat too much. Clothes, he said must come from synthetic materials

ROAD SAFETY:

For Boys & Girls

In the year 1947—figures for last year are not yet available—National Safety Council figures showed that 7,150 persons between the ages of 15 and 24 were killed in automobile accidents on American highways. In addition 330,000 boys and girls within that age group were injured in highway accidents.

ACCIDENT REPORTS from 29 states last year disclosed that 27 per cent of all drivers involved in accidents — or nearly one out of three — were under 25 years of age.

That was an appalling toll of the nation's youths and something, it appeared, should be done about it. Now, something was being done about it. The Inter-Industry highway safety committee had come up with a program designed to enlist the aid of youth itself in cutting down highway accidents and fatalities among the nation's youth.

The program is one of education which would tend to encourage greater responsibility on the part of younger drivers when using the family car. Program material now is being distributed to national organizations which agree to help sponsor the movement. The program is centered around drivers 15 to 25 years of age.

CHIEF INTEREST-and-cooperation-getter in the program are "man-to-man" and "Dad-to-Daughter" agreement cards. The agreements are for the signature of eligible sons and daughters with their fathers, and outline eight good driving practices which the young drivers agree to observe while using the family car.

All state and local public support organizations were urged to take advantage of this opportunity to help reduce highway traffic accidents involving youngsters.

Those interested were directed to write: Inter-Industry highway safety committee, 1026 17th street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

WHEAT YIELD:

Near-Record Crop

With wheat surplus already straining grower and governmental ingenuity in housing it, word was that the United States may approach a new crop record during the new season. Farmers, already off to a good start, were not surprised at a U.S. department of agriculture estimate of more than a billion, 21 million bushels from the winter-wheat crop. That estimate was nearly two million several weeks ago.

No official forecast was given on spring wheat, but the department said prospects point to around 300 million bushels for that type of wheat.

OFFICIALS indicated the tremendous wheat yield will create further surplus and might lead to government controls designed to cut the acreage in 1950 between 15 and 25 per cent. Controls would include planting restrictions and possibly marketing quotas for individual farmers.

No forecasts were given on other crops except rye, hay and southern peaches. But the department said reports from various parts of the country indicated progress of 1949 crops is encouraging. Rye production was estimated at 22 million bushels, second smallest acreage in 75 years. The hay crop was put at 101 million tons, a more than average yield. The peach crop in 10 southeastern states was forecast at approximately 15 million bushels, about the same as last year.

"Iron Man"

President Harry S. Truman is shown lighting the candles on a pre-birthday cake presented to him by the White House staff. Bundles in front of him represent only a portion of the birthday greetings he received. Having observed his 65th natal anniversary, the President was described as being in excellent physical condition—a veritable "iron man."

Lose in Stretch

It was a rough day for London merchants. Thousands of women besieged west end stores in the biggest nylon stocking hunt London had ever seen. Crowds, including some men waited outside the stores at dawn. But it was in vain.

The London Standard had announced the sale, but didn't mention that only 500 pairs of hose were issued to each of the 10 leading stores.

"Pretty Pebble"

A pebble found by two children in a river resulted in the discovery of the billion-dollar Kimberley diamond fields in South Africa. The children's "pretty pebble" was a diamond worth $2,500.

Hog Weather

Pigs and hogs don't do well in ice-cold weather. In fact, research has shown that hogs are healthier and grow and fatten faster when the temperature is between 70 and 80 degrees.

Alfalfa Meal

British scientists have reported the use of 2 per cent meal in special cereal mixtures for undernourished children, for its high vitamin content.

Erysipelas in Hogs

If erysipelas has been diagnosed in a herd of hogs, it may be advisable to double treat all young pigs as quickly as possible against this disease.

Coccidiosis Control

Dry litter, protected waterers, screened roosts, and good ventilation of poultry buildings are important in keeping coccidiosis under control.

Baby Pig Losses

Brood sow rations containing as much as one-fourth of alfalfa hay or meal are being recommended by some veterinarians as a means of curbing losses of baby pigs.

Cobwebs in Home

The housewife who is harassed by cobwebs on the ceiling usually can blame a small, dark spider called the Theridion Tepedariorum.

Tips On Burning

Wait for a still afternoon and then fire along plowed furrows. Keep fires where they are wanted; don't let them spread to the woods.

Sweet Corn Hybrids

Open pollinated varieties of sweet corn are being replaced gradually by improved sweet corn hybrids.

Colic in Horses

Horses fed largely on coarse roughage and forced to drink ice-cold water are easy victims of colic.

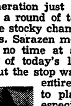
Magic in Sarazen's Method

By GRANTLAND RICE

THERE IS ONE badly-needed lesson in golf that the present generation can take from Gene Sarazen. This is the vital matter of time and speed.

It takes most of the modern golfing generation just an hour longer to play a round of tournament golf than the stocky champion from 1922 employs. Sarazen moves along and wastes no time at all.

Most of today's leading players wear out the stop watch. They take entirely too long to play every shot, especially the shots around the green. They turn a chip shot into an engineering ceremony. They turn a long-approach putt into a double engineering job as they survey every dip and roll of the green.



Grantland Rice

I have followed more than a few 18-hole matches that required over four hours of play. It is Sarazen's idea that a two-ball or three-ball match should be completed in two hours and 45 minutes.

Here is Sarazen's idea of playing his strokes. After the drive, he walks briskly to his ball. He sizes up the right line and the proper distance as he moves up. He takes about three or four seconds to make the proper club selection. Then he takes his swing.

On reaching the green, stocky Gene takes out his putter and walks up back of the ball, not around it. He picks out the correct line as he comes to the ball. He is then ready to make his putt. There is no waste motion—no extra pressure on the nerves—no form of convulsion—and a most pleasant afternoon for the cross-country runners who follow the matches.

Gene figures that with a two-ball match the pair should get around in about two hours and 20 minutes.

"I'd be goofy, a nervous wreck, if I wasted as much time playing each shot as so many do," Sarazen says. "Imagine walking at a snail's pace from your drive to the green, over 200 yards away, as I've seen several golfers do. Imagine taking seven or eight minutes to use up two putts. I would think that, after a few holes, many of these players would be hearing funny noises under their caps. I know my nerves would be in knots.

"One of the main reasons why I've been able to hang around for 27 years is the fact that I've saved my nerves by playing rather quickly. The longer you take to play a shot, the greater the pressure you put on your swing.

"Make your decisions quickly and definitely. Never have any doubt once you've reached for what you think should be the right club. And don't half-hit or over-swing. But above all, walk briskly and don't take up too much time playing your shots. Especially around the greens."

Getting the Jump

Quite recently, a pair of young men by the names of Billy Southworth and Leo Durocher were discussing the National league pennant race. Both agreed on one point.

"This is a good year," both said, "to reach July Fourth a few games in front. For the team in front after July Fourth will have a better chance to hold a lead.

"Why? Simple enough. The National league clubs are so well-matched that it will be harder than ever to close up any gap. The others won't let you. The eight clubs have never been as well-matched as they are this year.

"For example, if the Reds had Blackwell they would be just about as good as any team in the league. There isn't much to spare from top to bottom."

This was the expressed opinion of two of the league's veteran managers—two of the best in the game today. Eddie Dyer told me, before starting North, that the league might be less than 10 games apart at the finish. That means from top to bottom. Eddie didn't say it would be—he said it might be.

I honestly believe that if the Reds had the Ewell Blackwell of 1947, they would be about even money against any of the other seven teams. But baseball is full of breaks—injuries, accidents, mistakes, and team spirit.

Some teams quit quicker than others do. They let the psychological burden knock them over. They quit before they are beaten. This can be a battle of the gamest teams—the game teams against the quitters.

"I was rather astonished," Billy Southworth said, "to see how strong the Phillies were. They have a fine outfield, and good infield."

American Pearls

Pearls have so long been considered as Oriental jewels that it will surprise many to learn that specimens from the United States have been sent to Europe and even to the Orient. The famous "Queen Pearl", valued at $10,000, was found near Patterson, N. J. Pearls are found in mollusks in Maine, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and the Mississippi valley. Uncle Sam Says

Flag Day, June 14, holds significance for every American. Under the waving Stars and Stripes each citizen knows that he still possesses the most cherished of all ambitions—freedom and opportunity. He also knows he can retain these just so long as our country is economically sound, and he knows too that one of the most effective methods ever devised to keep it strong is an investment in U. S. Savings Bonds. Your purchase of Savings Bonds strengthens not only your own economy but your country's as well. If you are not now enrolled for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work or, if self-employed, the Bond-a-Month Plan at your bank, now is your BIG CHANCE to start.

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Mad? I was mad enough to burn out a bulb! That old Souris River up in North Dakota went on a rampage this spring and tore down Otter Tail transmission lines right and left. And there I was, one fine evening, sittin' on the east bank while the good people of Westhope, Kuroki and Antler were sittin' over on the other side — in the dark!

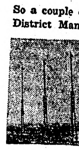
It looked pretty bad for awhile, until Warren Nye, Otter Tail Power Company's chief electrical engineer, turns to me and says: "Reddy, we're going to get you across that 'lake' and we're going to do it FAST!" Then he goes into a huddle with Ozzie Holmquist and his crew and Laurence Waite and the Rugby District crew.

"Okey by me," I says, "but you better figure out something good. I've heated a lot of water in my time but I don't fancy comin' down in the middle of that flood and tryin' to heat the entire Souris River."

LOOK AT THE FLOOD!

Well, you can see from the pictures what the boys came up with. Pretty slick, too. They spliced 45-foot poles onto the tops of 40-foot poles and got the necessary height so the wires could extend clear across the 2400 feet of flooded area. That's quite an achievement. Nearly a half mile of wire suspended [illegible] feet in the air, with no poles in between!

So a couple of days later I'm talking to R. W. Dyson, Otter Tail District Manager at Devils Lake, and telling him all about it. "Yes," says Bob, "it's things like that people never see when they look at their electric bills."



LOOK AT THE POLES!

"You know," he continued, "buying electricity is different from buying potatoes. When Mrs. Jones wants to use her electric washer, it would be nice if she could just come into our office and buy a bushel of kilowatts. We could sell kilowatts cheaper that way. But when Mrs. Jones turns on her washing machine. the kilowatts have to be RIGHT THERE — Reddy-on-the-spot!"

"Yeah, that's what costs money," I said. "You don't have to send out after me, or haul me in. Little ol' Reddy is there 24 hours a day, just waitin' for you to flip a switch and put me to work." People are demandin' that kind of convenience in ever-increasing numbers. That's why the Otter Tail folks are spending over $6,000,000 for construction of new and expanded plants this year. Which means I'll be REDDY in more places than ever before.

REDDY KILOWATT

June Is Dairy Month

The Dairy Cow, and the milk that she produces, has played an important part in development of farming and in building up the cash income for communities throughout our state. The first dairy cows were brought to Minnesota 100 years ago and the milk was consumed locally. History records that the early farming was largely wheat raising but after several decades of "taking off and putting nothing back on" the lands became deleted of their former fertility and the owners had to do something about it. They did, and they turned to the dairy cow with the result that the state is now known as the Butter and Bread state, with dairying showing a marked increse yearly.

One of the big problems of the Dairyman has been the production of good tasting, high quality milk and othet dairy products. The two leading discoveries that helped the most in this development was the Babcock test to determine the butterfat content of milk and cream, and the process of pasteurization the latter being the answer to the serious problem of destroying certain pathogenic organisms and undesirable bacteria.

The quality of the milk that the consumer purchases today, from the standpoint of cleanliness, and tastiness, is tops. All cities, towns and villages have a public health milk code that is followed to the letter. The standards in these regulations have been set down, after years of practical experience, thru the cooperation of United States public health service, our Dairy department at our state agricultural college, our state department of Dairy and Food and local city or town Health regulations.

These health regulations control the methods of handling and milking the cows, all sanitation proceedures. water supply, cooling, hauling, pasteurization and Bottling of Milk. and keeping it properly refrigerated until delivered to the ultimate consumer.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Russians Urge West German State Be Wiped Out; Ask 4-Power Rule; Congress Curtails 'Must' Legislation

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

GERMANY:
A Sour Note

The Big Four conference in Paris was underway. For the first time in the cold war between East and West there was real hope that harmony would be forthcoming.

In fact, Secretary of State Dean Acheson had been warned by Senator Vandenberg, senate foreign affairs committee chairman, not to be too aggressive with the Russians, but rather to keep open, if possible, the door to lasting peace.

WITH the Russian blockade of Berlin lifted and the Soviets apparently ready to sing a new tune in world cooperation, the theme of the conference was to be harmony.

But the delegates hardly had time to warm the seats of their chairs before the Russians were at it again. Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky blandly proposed that the council of foreign ministers wipe out the new west German state and return German affairs, including direction of the Ruhr, to four-power control machinery.

MANY had expected this course by the Soviets. They had predicted that lifting of the Berlin blockade was done to soften up the ministers for this very proposal. But it didn't work. All three western powers immediately rejected the proposition.

The Soviet foreign minister showed little tact. He led up to his proposal with a long tirade denouncing the U.S., Britain and France for what he termed "violations" of the Potsdam agreements.

SOVIET ideology could not tolerate a separate German state with autonomous powers and there was little question that the Kremlin would stand firm in this position. On the other hand there was no possibility that the western powers would recede from their intention to return government of Germany to the German people. Thus it would seem the impasse was clearly established.

For the U. S., Dean Acheson delivered himself of what might well be the decade's masterpiece of understatement when he called the Russian suggestions "disappointing."

But then he summed up the world's reaction when he added: "My hopes are distinctly chilled."

CONGRESS:
Let's Wait

A lot of "trouble for nothing" might be an apt phrase to describe all the national agitation against President Truman's health insurance and civil rights proposals—for his own leaders in congress erased the issues by taking both hotly-contested items of legislation off the "must" list.

ALSO slated for further delay was the administration's four-billion-dollar tax increase plan, the equally controversial Brannan farm program and the foreign-arms proposal.

This left only three measure bills for top priority action. They were:

1. Extension of the reciprocal trade program which has passed the house but is stalled in the senate.

2. Repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor act.

3. Ratification of the North Atlantic security treaty which requires only a two-thirds majority vote in the senate.

SENATE MAJORITY LEADER Scott Lucas indicated action might be sought before adjournment on minimum-wage boosts, the international wheat agreement, and a pay raise for top government executives and military personnel.

Speculation was that decision to abandon for the time the compulsory health insurance program stemmed from mounting congressional clamor for sharp cuts in government spending, with the civil rights legislation delay believed motivated by fear of a southern filibuster. Congress wants to adjourn by August, and consideration of any of the "powder keg" legislation might make that impossible.

LUCAS said he thought President Truman was "definitely satisfied" with the progress being made.

That surprised some legislators, for unless congress repeals the Taft-Hartley law, the President will be unable to point to accomplishment of any of his campaign pledges when congress adjourns.

Potent Vote

POTENT VOTE . . . This lone woman voter, to whom a pair of shoes would be a Godsend, is shown as she cast her ballot in the elections held in the Russian zone of Germany. The Russians had hoped to make a big propaganda gun of the election—a gun that would be used in the "Big Four" conference beginning May 23. But the Soviets had to admit that one-third of the valid ballots cast voted against the all-Communist slate.

FORRESTAL:
"Better to Die . . ."

"Comfortless, nameless, hopeless, save in the dark prospect of the yawning grave . . . better to die, and sleep the never-waking sleep than linger on . . ."

With the import of these lines from Sophocles' "Chorus From Ajax" so obviously goading his consciousness, James V. Forrestal, former U. S. defense secretary, plunged to his death from the 16th floor of national naval medical center in Washington.

FORRESTAL had been under treatment for "operational fatigue" since April 2. Attendant physicians said he had been considering suicide, that the nature of his malady indicated this mental condition as an inescapable adjunct to it. But they felt he was getting better; in fact they had hoped to release him from the hospital in 30 days.

As secretary of defense, Forrestal labored under a burden such as few national servants have carried. His was the job of directing the gigantic naval program during the war, as well as the almost hopeless task of attempting unification of the armed forces. The strain was great and a sympathetic people could understand why it might have broken a strong man.

President Truman took full cognizance of Forrestal's worth when he declared the former defense secretary was "as much a casualty of war as if he had died on the firing line."

BUT there was an added burden weighing on Forrestal. That was a burden of attack and vilification from two of the nation's top radio newscaster-columnists. After his shocking death, the press of the nation began to revalue the impact of its effect and that of the radio.

Some nationally-syndicated observers charged that the attacks upon Forrestal via radio and in print had added to his load of desperation. They advanced the premise that unless some check was put upon this type of journalism, it might discourage many able men from entering government service.

There is possibly no agony of mankind comparable to that which must go on in the mind of the man about to take his own life. It is wholly foreign to the concept of the normal, every-day mind. Certainly it flies in the face of the very first natural law—self preservation. Weighing all this, it is difficult to understand how there could be anything but sympathy for Forrestal, and an honest effort to understand something of the torturous mental suffering which drove him to leap to his death.

STAND-IN IN DOGHOUSE

Goose on Loose Perturbs Gold Rush Fete

Genevieve the goose was on the loose and her successor was in the doghouse.

Genevieve the first was a plump young bird bought from a farmer to play the role of the goose that laid the golden egg for the Women's Medical college '49 Gold Rush fete in Philadelphia. An important role which the ladies were determined to see done right.

But Genevieve, obviously a vagabond at heart, vamoosed from the car in which she was being brought to town.

A Philadelphian living in Miami read about Genevieve and had an idea. He'd replace her with a goose he'd seen hanging around the Hialeah race track. He went to the track, found Genevieve the second waddling about.

JOB OUTLOOK:
Better for Grads

With starting salaries holding firm at last year's record high levels, signs of a last-minute pick-up in jobs for the mammoth 1949 class of college graduates were showing up, according to an annual employment survey by the family economics bureau of Northwestern National Life Insurance Company.

Although two-thirds of the 133 colleges and universities covered to date find their total employment calls all the way from slightly to "disappointingly" below 1948, schools reporting in the final week of the survey have shown a much better ratio, the summary says. Approximately half of the late responses report their record of job offers to date as equal to or slightly above 1948 experience.

DARTMOUTH college's school of business administration observes, for example, "We were disturbed by the February-March slump, but the later pick-up has 'wiped out our losses,'" St. Louis university also reports that demand faded in February and March, but "as of the past six weeks it has begun to develop beautifully." University of Nebraska's college of business administration notes a stronger employment demand in the last ten days. But Duquesne university at Pittsburgh reports, "Calls in general are less than in 1948 except those for sales personnel which have increased."

Boston university says job offers are 7 per cent fewer than last year; Ohio State finds about the same number of employers represented on the campus this spring, but each firm taking fewer men. Yale university has recorded more employment calls than as of a year ago.

FIVE out of every six schools listed in the survey report starting salaries to be as high or higher than last year. Prevailing range of offers is from $200 to $275 per month for business administration and liberal arts seniors, and from $225 to $325 for engineering grads, with exceptional men getting still higher offers. Illinois Institute of Technology reports: "The class of 375 engineers graduating January 29, 1949, averaged $280 per month for a basic 40-hour week; this is the highest average salary of any class in our history."

TOURISTS:
More Cultured

The American tourist these days was coming in for a new type of treatment from his overseas hosts. For instance, in Capetown, South Africa, according to merchants, the new tourist is not the "vulgar type which used to invade Europe in hordes, wearing horn-rimmed glasses and loud clothes."

"THIS new American is well bred, quiet, wealthy, but has the familiar souvenir mania," said one curio dealer. "One bought everything I showed him. 'Is it genuine Zulu?' he kept asking."

Then, the dealer added, "he took all my shields, assegais and beadwork. I had to call a ricksha to get the stuff down to the ship. And when he saw the ricksha, he wanted to buy that."

AMERICANS no doubt will palpitate with pride at this new evaluation of their cultural level by those abroad who profit most from tourist business—but most will console themselves with the fact that so long as he has any money, the American tourist will manage to get along quite well wherever he may be in Europe or elsewhere.

Victims

Mrs. Ralph J. Fugatt holds Mark Richard, 7 weeks, at their Springfield home. Her husband has never seen his son because he is in Rutland, Vermont jail under an early 1800 law which demands payment of court judgment or paupers oath.

CRIME:
Penalty Apropos

A Midland, Mich., judge sagely fitted the punishment to the crime in a case in municipal court. Two youths, 21 and 18, were brought in on a charge of crashing a wedding party and running away with the wedding cake. They said they did it on a dare.

After pondering a moment, the judge ordered the culprits to buy a wedding present and give it to the newlyweds.

When Buying Chicks

First step for a person buying chicks is to purchase from a pullorum-free flock and then have a clean place to put the chicks when they arrive. Buy chicks from a hatchery that is carrying on a rigid testing program to eliminate the disease in breeding stock. Hatcheries which are doing this advertise the fact that their breeding stock has a low pullorum tolerance.

"Pioneer"

The 98-year-old wood burning locomotive "Pioneer," highly treasured for its early speed records and participation in the Civil war, was built in 1851 by Seth Wilmarth at Boston for the Cumberland Valley railroad, now part of the Pennsylvania railroad. The locomotive frequently attained a speed of 60 miles an hour.

In Search of Insects

Since insects outnumber in kinds all other groups of species of animals combined by a ratio of about six to one, researchers are constantly on the outlook for a new member to classify and name. About 750,000 species have been named and described, but authorities estimate there are between three and five million unknown to science.

Casing Eggs

To maintain the finest quality possible, eggs should not be cased until all the body heat has been removed from the egg. The eggs then should be packed carefully, with large ends up; this improves the appearance of the layers and decreases damage to interior quality of the egg, especially the air cell.

Protecting Silver from Tarnish

Question: Is there any way to prevent silverware from tarnishing? Isn't there a preparation to apply on the silverware as a thin coating to prevent tarnish?

Answer: Dealers in jewelers' supplies usually sell a lacquer for this purpose, but firms of this kind are only found in large cities. If you cannot get it, a clear lacquer, sold at a well-stocked paint store, can be used instead. After polishing the silver, wipe it with benzine and then apply the lacquer.

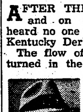
Palestinian, Ponder or Capot?

By GRANTLAND RICE

What About the Belmont?

AFTER THE RACE at Pimlico and on the way home we heard no one discussing either the Kentucky Derby or the Preakness.

The flow of racing conversation turned in the general direction of the Belmont, to be run June 11 over the mile-and-a-half test, the real test for the three-year-old.



Grantland Rice

There were three names that led most of the comment — Ponder, Capot and Palestinian. The triple crown for 1949 is now dust and dreams, or such things as dust and dreams are made of.

With Ponder in charge of the Derby and Capot on top in the Preakness, it would be no unfair turn of fortune's wheel to see Palestinian win the Belmont, which he might do. The Bieber-Jacobs horse was finishing close up and strongly in both the Derby and the Preakness and no one can say that Belmont's longer race will hurt him a bit.

Before the Preakness I happened to run across Warren Wright, the Baron of Calumet.

"The Preakness distance may have been too short for Ponder," he said. "But I honestly think Ponder should win the Belmont. The longer the distance, the better Ponder likes it. He comes from far back, 20 lengths or more, and he needs running distance to make up this ground."

Parnell Ben Jones offered no prediction but he admitted that the longer the race the better Ponder would like it—even up to two miles.

No one can question the fact that Ponder can handle the route. What about Capot? John Gaver turned in a fine job of having Capot in perfect shape for both the Derby and the Preakness. When a horse breaks a track record, running against the time set by such horses as Whirlaway, Count Fleet and Citation, he must be moving in a hurry.

Capot was leading at the mile and three-sixteenths in both the Derby and the Preakness. He had the continued speed of the field. But what about a mile and a half? This is something else again. That extra quarter can be a heavy test unless the race is slowly run.

Palestinian has shown both speed and stamina in his last three races—the Wood, the Derby and the Preakness. His record is 2-3-2, being extremely close to winning on two occasions. Ponder's most recent marks are 1-5. Capot's last three are 3-2-1.

Palestinian, like Capot and Ponder, is also an improving horse. Palestinian has had enough speed to run with anybody. He has been coming on, cutting away ground, in his last three big races. Capot had to fight bravely and desperately to keep his head lead at Pimlico and I don't think an extra 16th of a mile would have bothered Palestinian in the slightest. He is both fast and strong.

The Belmont will have all this—plus Sun Bahram, Noble Impulse and others. Old Rockport? Rocky seems to be slipping instead of getting better. He hasn't had it since he left California, although as able a trainer as Ben Jones still believes he hasn't run his race.

More Games Than One

A day or two ago we ran into Ralph Kercheval, now in charge of Alfred Vanderbilt's racing farm.

How many remember that more than 10 years ago Kercheval was one of the greatest kickers college football ever knew? Many well-known pro coaches have tangled in arguments as to whether Kercheval or Ken Strong was the greater all-around kicker. Shipwreck Kelly, another Kentuckian, was always a Kercheval booster.

Ralph had full early faith in Vanderbilt's Loser Weeper, winner recently of the Metropolitan. "Loser Weeper has improved as much as any horse I know," Kercheval said before that race.

As far as racing goes, Sammy Renick has gone out for the versatility record. Sammy started as a rider—one of the best. Then he began as a racing owner and now is involved in the television section, where he is one of the season's video hits. "No," Sam said recently, "I've never tried training. I may take a shot at that later."

The one who has tried the toughest combination is Ellsworth Vines, who is battling earnestly to make as good a living out of golf as he did out of tennis. Vines has played a lot of fine golf, but he has never been the champion he used to be at tennis.

GRIDDERS ARE SITTERS

Lou Little, famous Columbia football coach, has appealed for jobs for football players as baby sitters.

"It is no gag," he says. "I will personally guarantee that any of my players will prove 100 per cent dependable."

So there, Junior! Behave yourself while momsy and popsy are at the theater tonight or else develop some fast off-tackle plays.

Reactions to football players as baby sitters have been varied. At first thought, many parents had difficulty associating "Rock-a-bye Baby" and "Sleep, Pretty One, Sleep" with "Block that kick!" and "Hit that line hard!" They found it hard to think of a husky fullback as the best person to handle kids who made up their own rules as the evening went along.

It did not seem to mother that when she asked, "Do you think the baby is all right?" she would find comfort in father's answer, "Yes, my dear. Remember that our baby sitter for tonight booted the longest punt in the 1948 season!"

But on more sober reflection most people decided that, children being the problems they are when mom and pop are out, it might be reassuring to know that they are in the hands of a baby sitter coached in a rugged school and with a good record for victory, on fields wet or dry.

Kids are quick to recognize authority. They know when they are up against heavy odds. In the manner and actions of a university grid star, they sense power, speed, determination and the old "do or die" spirit.

Few children will try to sit up until midnight listening to the radio if the baby sitter is all-American material.

Baby is not going to whip out the airgun around 9:30 and take some pot shots at the old woman across the courtyard, knowing that a great broken field runner is on watch.

No kid is going to howl for a cooky if it can see in the eyes of the baby sitter the never-yield-an-inch spirit of a football man around whose end no opponent made any progress in two seasons.

All in all, parents should feel easy with a football star as a baby sitter. Even in a home where the kiddies are sure to get rambunctious a crack gridiron man can detect the signals, sense the trick plays and stop the formations. Unless, of course, he is in one of those homes where there are so many children they use the double platoon system.

Why Fans Go Mad

These days in the video belts where baseball games and horse races are broadcast the same afternoon are proving pretty hectic to sports fans. Trying to follow both is doing the American nervous system no good. We found ourself shouting, "Slide ya big bum!" at a horse the other day and yelling, "Stop pullin' his head off," at a ballplayer.

It is all quite confusing. To see both sports, a video addict has to be pretty fast on the switches. In a stirring ball game it is quite a trick tuning out at the proper moment to catch the horses all set in the starting gate. And in an especially important horse race split-second judgment is necessary in deciding when to tune out of the horse oval and into the ball park.

We were watching Elmer Twitchell in such an ordeal recently. The ball game was well under way when it came time for the ponies. It was a tie score. Elmer struggled to keep away from the race broadcast, but couldn't do it. He suddenly switched into the horse channel. The skinners were being saddled in the paddock. Elmer missed one entry. "They must have benched him!" he observed.

He liked a horse on which Arcaro was announced as the jockey. "Arcaro!" he exclaimed. "That's poor judgment. They pitched him yesterday."

Then while the race track announcer was chatting on generalities, Elmer dove back into the baseball channel. The home team had a man on second, one out and a big hitter up. It added to his pulse beat and general confusion. "Come on!" he yelled, "Don't go wide on the turns. Ya can't lose at the weights!"

Back to the ponies he switched, just in time. The horses broke as one. Elmer liked something called Mike's Pride. "Atta baby," he cried, "You got your stuff today!"

Lesson from Britain

Hard times and doing without—that's still the order of life in Britain. "Austerity" is the official name for it. True, a little sacrificing is not harmful to anyone. But as a political system or way of life, British "austerity" is going to continue looking a bit drab (as a cloak for socialism), when you compare it with the private management and freedom of enterprise we know in America. Britain, in effect, is telling America what not to do.

Fact of Life

But at the moment, the British experience is helping underscore an economic fact that needs more underscoring here in America. That fact is this: increases in wages mean higher prices. Economists in our country have known for a long time that this is true, yet the popular view of it insists that the boss can go on indefinitely granting increases, year after year, without ever raising prices at all. The British know better.

It seems that Sir Stafford Cripps, who is in charge of money matters in England, is right now urging British workers (even they who own industry and run the government) to work harder without higher wages. If the Britishers do this, the reasoning goes, there will be more to export to America. Then, Britain will have more dollars with which to buy the things her people need. Shrewd enough!

Another Round?

You see, the British are driving to get into as much of the American market as possible. Sir Stafford recognizes that if British workers should demand increases in wages, prices of British goods would make it impossible to compete successfully on the American market. In other words, the British (even the labor government) know that increases in wages do mean higher prices.

Is Sir Stafford counting on prices going up in America? Well, at least he is laying plans to compete with American manufacturers—and another round of wage increases over here would do much to help him, according to his own formula. Yes, indeed. Another round of wage boosts would send up prices so high that Sir Stafford would have little trouble in getting rid of everything Britain sells, from pottery to Austin motor cars.

Forced Prices

Foreign trade is good for our nation, just like it is good for the British. It's a two way street. If we fail to get into the competition ourselves, then our goods will stop moving as fast as we know our production lines can move them.

This lesson Britain is teaching us works at home, too. The one thing we want to do is to keep production going, for we know that our people want jobs and have the capacity to consume. But if we are going to keep forcing prices upward, we may one day realize that depression is here just because we have done that very thing. We can have nothing but false prosperity that foretells depression, if we force prices too high.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Don't Fence Yourself In

Every spring, Handy Peterson and Easy Roberts patch up the stone wall that separates their farms. They walk along talking—Easy on one side, Handy on the other—picking up the fallen stones and putting them back.

Afterwards, over a friendly glass of beer, Easy says, "You know, wall-mending is a nice neighborly custom, but we really don't need that wall. We keep it up just because it happens to be there."

"Yes," says Handy, "a lot of walls and fences and boundaries keep on separating people for no good reason. Maybe we'd all be better off if some of them were torn down, instead of kept standing."

From where I sit, Handy said a mouthful. Take the "walls of intolerance" that people build up against each other. I like a temperate glass of beer now and then, you may prefer buttermilk—but that's no reason for me to criticize you, or you, me. Let's live and let-live together—making more friends and fewer "walls."

Peacetime Record

Iron ore production in the United States in 1948 set a peacetime record at 101,350,000 gross tons, nearly nine per cent above the 1947 output, according to a bureau of mines report. This tonnage, the second highest in history, was 4,176,000 tons less than in the top year 1942. All major iron ore producing districts exceeded their 1947 output. Lake Superior mines produced 83,116,000.

Cathay

Cathay, a name occasionally given to China in literary use, is often mentioned in Marco Polo's writings. But, the Venetian traveler of six centuries ago explains, it should be applied only to the portion of China north of the Yangtze river—the part which today is largely Communist-held. Manzi is the corresponding name of Marco Polo's time for the domain to the Yantze's south.

Birth of A Slogan

"Safety First," now a national slogan of the American people, originated many years ago from the safety policy of a company which became a part of U. S. Steel. It grew out of the statement made in the 1870's by the H. C. Frick Coke Company: "The Safety of Our Men Must Be Our First Consideration."

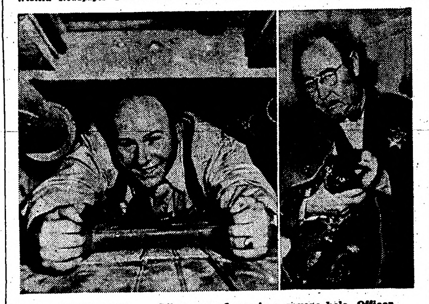
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Administration Asks Vast Powers In New Agriculture Support Plan; Labor Legislation Gets Priority

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



NICE TRY! . . . Like a round peg in a square hole, Officer George McPherson of the San Francisco humane society became stuck in a narrow light well into which he crawled to rescue a cat. It took fellow officers several minutes to dislodge him. The cat was removed through a window opening onto the bottom of the light well and is being held by Officer George Warren, at right.

FARM PLAN:
More Curbs Asked

Critics and supporters alike of Agriculture Secretary Charles Brannan's 1949 farm support program were surprised when Brannan asked sweeping new powers to control the nation's agricultural production.

THE latest Brannan proposals were contained in the full draft of the administration's farm program which was laid before congress. In that program, the powers requested would mark the first time in the history of the nation—not excepting wartime—when farmers and their activities would be so completely under federal control.

For example, Brannan asked that rigid marketing quotas, now usable on only six major crops, be applied on the great bulk of farm products, including meat animals, milk, poultry, eggs, fruits and vegetables.

It was a bold stroke on the part of the administration and one that was gambling with farmer good will over the nation.

For it was quickly discernible that, if enacted, this program would put the American farmer under federal control from the moment he arose to feed the chickens and other stock in the morning, until he tended his vegetables and worked his crops, milked the cows and fed the stock again in the evening.

The big question was: Would the farmers stand for that, even if congress did enact the law? Farmers would be given a choice because under the Brannan proposal, they would have to vote adoption of the program by a two-thirds vote of all producers.

Brannan envisions a condition where prices would be allowed to move freely in the market with farmers getting a payment covering the difference if and when market prices fell below a predetermined "fair" return.

LABOR LAW:
Gets Priority

With domestic issues having been given the green light over foreign affairs, the U. S. senate was committed to wrestle out a new labor law—or repeal Taft-Hartley—before adjournment.

The importance of the labor question to the administration was indicated in the senate's shelving discussion of the North Atlantic security pact until the troublesome labor issue has been disposed of.

THE reason was rather obvious. Organized labor, worried by an apparent disinclination of congress to go along with the President in repealing Taft-Hartley and fearing further delay, was pushing the administration to get going. There was constant reminder behind the scenes of the President's campaign pledges to scrap the present overall labor law and labor wanted action. The 1950 congressional races weren't too far off and the administration evidently felt it had better deliver or face labor's antagonism at the polls next year.

It was estimated some three weeks of debate would be necessary before the administration's bill came to a showdown vote.

MAJORITY LEADER Scott Lucas declared that if all major legislation were not disposed of by July 31, "we shall extend the length of the session until we have dealt with the most urgent proposals."

Baldness "Cure"

Buried on inside pages of most newspapers was a story which, if true, would have rated banner headlines in the eyes of those it concerned.

FOR, from Een, Holland, there came a claim that Meinheer J. Van Rooyen, a bewildered little barber, could cure baldness—no fooling.

The news leaked out, and the little barber shop was thronged with visitors. Letters poured in by the thousands.

The meinheer started it all himself by trying to stop his own thinning hair from growing thinner, experimenting with various lotions and use of infra-red rays.

ACCORDING to reports, he finally hit upon a combination that made his hair grow. Tried on others, it succeeded. Now he is treating 160 people, working 13 hours a day.

U. S. JOBS:
Could Be Cut

A contention that the government cut its civilian employe rolls by 10 per cent and "accomplish exactly the same purposes" was made in Washington by former President Herbert Hoover. Declaring that this could be done if the government were organized properly, Mr. Hoover said the savings to the taxpayers might reach four to five billion dollars a year.

MR. HOOVER'S statement must have carried some weight, but there were only an optimistic few who believed anything might be done along the lines he pointed out.

The former President was speaking with authority because a commission of which he had been named the head—a fact-finding body to uncover just such things as he had uncovered—had exhaustively studied government functions and processes and had reported its findings.

A 200,000 cut in federal personnel would require no wholesale firings, he said. He added it could be accomplished through normal turnover, which now runs about 500,000 a year.

BERLIN:
New Issues

The meeting of the big four council of foreign ministers had developed one fact—discussion of German unity under current conditions was futile. So, it appeared, attention would be turned to Berlin where some major problems yet remained unsolved.

Berlin presented concrete issues which many hoped could be resolved or, at least, discussed more profitably. The western powers were understood as ready to insist upon written agreements concerning rights in Berlin to replace oral understandings that alone have given them any rights in the immediate past.

It was also believed they would urge a single elected city council and retention of occupation status for their zone. It was believed inevitable that the question of four-power authority—which led to a deadlock over the veto right when the whole of Germany was discussed—will arise again in relation to a Berlin regime.

'IF YOU CAN'T BEAT 'EM . . .'

Shanghai Populace Swings to Communists

It was mostly beer and skittles for the Communists in Shanghai. The city and its millions had swing into the Communist camp, not by degrees, but with what appeared to be an enthusiastic rush. Along long lines of avenues, Red flags flew from every shop. Newspapers reversed their policy overnight and began to sell the populace on communism.

Students danced and sang Communist songs. All traces of any nationalism or opposition to communism appeared to be gone. In the customs house work appeared to be stopped. Instead, clerks assembled in the halls learning Communist songs. Chinese radio stations spent much time giving singing lessons. The words were read over slowly, then music was played.

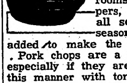
HOUSEHOLD MEMOS . . . by Lynn Chambers

Cook a Savory Main Dish in a Skillet
(See Recipes Below)

Skillet Dinners

WHEN YOU WANT to cook a really appetizing dinner for your family, do it in a skillet.

Veal chops, pork chops, curries and chicken, all can be cooked to mouth-watering tenderness in a skillet after browning, by covering the skillet and turning down the heat. Mushrooms, green peppers, onions and all sorts of other seasoning can be added to make the food savory.



Pork chops are a real favorite, especially if they are prepared in this manner with tomatoes, green pepper, celery and rice.

Pork Chop Skillet Meal
(Serves 4)

- 4 tablespoons fat
- 4 pork chops, 1" thick
- 4 slices Bermuda onion, ¼" thick.
- 3 cups canned tomatoes
- 4 rings green pepper, ¼" thick
- 4 tablespoons uncooked rice
- 1 cup celery diced

Heat four tablespoons of fat in skillet on high heat. Turn switch to medium and brown pork chops until well browned on both sides, approximately 15 minutes. Place a slice of onion and one pepper ring on each chop. Place one tablespoon of rice in each ring. Pour tomatoes around meat and add celery. Place cover on skillet. When steaming (about eight minutes), switch to simmer and allow to cook for one hour.

Skillet Chicken
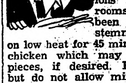
(Serves 3-4)

- 2 cups cooked chicken
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 3 cups chicken stock or water
- ½ teaspoon salt
- Dash of pepper
- 2 bay leaves
- 1 sprig thyme
- 2 small sprigs parsley
- 8 small onions
- ½ pound mushrooms
- 1 tablespoon chopped parsley

Melt butter in a saucepan. Stir in flour. Add stock slowly, stirring constantly, until sauce is thickened. Then add bay leaves, thyme and sprigs of parsley which have been tied together. Add salt, pepper, onions and mushrooms which have been cleaned and stemmed. Simmer on low heat for 45 minutes. Add the chicken which may be in large pieces, if desired. Heat chicken, but do not allow mixture to boil. Remove bay leaves, thyme and parsley which were tied together. Serve very hot, over biscuits or cooked rice, sprinkled with chopped parsley.



Skillet Veal Chops
(Serves 4)

- 6 loin veal chops
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 3 tablespoons flour
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- 5 tablespoons fat
- 1 cup sliced onions
- 1 cup canned tomatoes
- ½ cup hot water
- 1 bay leaf
- 2 tablespoons cornstarch
- ½ cup cold water

Dredge the chops in flour which has been mixed with salt and pepper. Saute onions in two tablespoons of fat until brown. Place chops on top of onions, and add tomatoes, water and bay leaf. Cover and simmer on top of range for 45 to 60 minutes until tender. Remove chops to a hot platter. Make a smooth paste of cornstarch and cold water and add to liquid in skillet. Stir and cook until thickened, then pour over chops.

Veal in Sour Cream
(Serves 4)

- 2 pounds boned veal shoulder, cut in 1" cubes
- 2 ounces salt pork, cut fine
- ½ cup minced onion
- ½ clove garlic, minced fine, if desired
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- 1 tablespoon paprika
- 1½ cups boiling water
- ¾ cup soured cream
- 2 tablespoons flour
- ¼ cup cold water

Saute salt pork, onion, garlic and veal until meat is browned well on all sides. Add seasonings and water. Cook, covered over low heat until veal is tender, about one hour. Remove veal to hot platter and keep warm. Add sour cream to pan drippings. Stir flour and water together until smooth and add to ingredients in saucepan.

Lamb Kidney Saute
(Serves 4)

- 8 lamb kidneys, split
- 2 tablespoons fat
- 1 tablespoon flour
- 1 tablespoon chopped parsley
- ½ cup beef stock
- ¼ cup canned tomato juice
- ⅛ teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons Worchestershire sauce
- 4 slices toast

Saute cleaned kidneys in fat in a skillet for 15 to 20 minutes or until tender, turning frequently. Reduce heat and sprinkle flour over kidneys. Blend flour with fat while turning. Add parsley, stock, tomato juice, salt and sauce. Cook over low heat until sauce is thickened. Serve on toast.

Curried Lamb
(Serves 4)

- 1 cup uncooked rice
- ¾ cup sliced onions
- ¾ cup diced celery
- 2 tablespoons fat
- 1½ cups cubed, cooked lamb
- 1 teaspoon curry powder
- 2 cups lamb stock or gravy
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 2 tablespoons flour
- ¼ cold water

Cook rice until tender and keep hot. In the meantime, saute onions, celery in fat in a skillet until lightly browned. Add lamb, curry powder, stock and salt. Cover and simmer 30 minutes. If desired, thicken liquid in pan with flour blended with cold water. Serve over rice.

LYNN SAYS:
Try These Seasonings For Vegetables

Bake carrots if you want to try something new and different. Sprinkle small scraped carrots with ⅓ cup of butter which is creamed with ½ cup sugar, one teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon cinnamon and ⅓ cup boiling water.

Garden-fresh green beans, slivered and buttered, will be even more tasty if you add some chopped mint leaves to them just before finishing the cooking.

Add chopped pimiento and green pepper to corn cut from the cob before serving. This adds flavor as well as color.

If you're fond of radishes, slice and fry them in butter. Season with salt and pepper and serve.

Chopped mint and parsley may be added to peas during the last few minutes of cooking to give them garden flavor.

Interest in cauliflower will hit a new high if you brown bread crumbs in butter and pour over the vegetable just before serving.

Aid for the Women

A method designed to increase the attractiveness of woman's hair, by causing it to wave and also to curl and thus reflect light in greater degree is covered by a patent issued to a New York woman, according to National Patent council. An inexpensive wave curler of non-metallic materials is used in the process; the inventor suggests the pinna, or leaflets of the pinnated date-palm leaf. The patent reveals a method of treating and preserving the pinna and describes each step to be used in producing the proper waves and curls.

You may suffer nagging backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling. Sometimes frequent and scanty urination with smarting and burning is another sign that something is wrong with the kidneys or bladder.

A railway doesn't ask the taxpayer to build, maintain or improve its tracks and other facilities. It pays its own way. Currently, Great Northern is installing continuous rail—replacing jointed rail—in its 7.79-mile Cascade Tunnel in Washington State. The torch wielder above is removing excess metal from the weld of two new rails.

"TRUCKS AND RAILS"...

"Continued freight rate increases are getting to the point where shippers will shift from the rails to trucks . . . Railroad employment off 3.6 per cent . . . trucks and other methods of transportation up 11.1. Of course there may be other factors, but the figures do seem to tell a story."—Lewistown (Montana) Daily News.

"There are other factors, brother, and they are seriously militating against rail employment and the whole structure of railway operation.

"The railways are rigidly restricted by Federal and state regulatory bodies, harassed by feather-bedding and other union pressures, an element of the public, hawk-like, is always ready to make the pounce because of a long-time prejudice, admittedly caused by tactless attitudes on the part of rail management in an earlier time, and often for trivial causes brings suits for unreasonable amounts, on the promptings of professional corporation baiters.

An Editor's Opinion

In the May 27 issue of the Cut Bank, Montana, Pioneer Press appeared an editorial, "Trucks and Rails." Mr. Dan Whetstone, nationally known editor of the Pioneer Press, graciously has permitted Great Northern to reprint his editorial comment.

"All these things and more the management of rail systems have to contend with and keep constant alertness to overcome.

"In a time when this Western country was almost empty land, railways constructed tremendously expensive roadbeds, entailing costly maintenance, not to detail the huge outlays for plant and rolling stock, to serve the sparsely settled areas of this Western country.

"As they have been doing all over the country, we generous-minded and soft-headed Westerners have taxed ourselves heavily to build a modern system of highways and then have invited the Johnnies-come-lately, the truckers, to almost crowd the users of lighter motor traffic off these highways, to pound them to pieces with heavier and heavier trucks and trailers; more than that, to create an ever greater hazard for the lighter motoring public.

"If we had the vision and sense of equity, had realized that the truckers were being given an unfair advantage over the rail system when we built these trunk highway systems, we would have insisted that the truckers build and maintain their own roadbeds. Maybe it's not too late to insist that this be done.

"At this juncture let's give you a peep at comparative figures as relates to bearing tax burdens, as noted by Harold Stearns, publisher of the Harlowtown (Montana) Times:

"The (one Montana) railroad's property taxes, roadway maintenance and interest on investment was $55 millions last year. That was 22 per cent of gross revenue. The truckers pay for highway usage only 5 per cent of their gross revenues, a difference of $43 millions . . . it is clearly shown that the public is subsidizing the trucks in order to ruin the railroad's business.

"In the course of a year's time the moods of the elements, floods and storms and snow and dirtslides cause many derailments and delays. They rate a four-inch news story in the newspapers. You and I forget about them in a matter of hours. Yet they may cost the railroads hundreds of thousands of dollars. It was reliably reported that the floods in the Columbia basin in the spring of 1948 cost the Great Northern over two million dollars.

"Some of us longer residents in Montana who saw the cycle of drought and crop devastation and consequent pinching times remember that the taxes paid by the railways traversing the state were for several years the major item in sustaining county government.

"The airways are speedy and provide a measure of convenience, but from the standpoint of providing tax revenue their contribution is of little significance.

"I do not want to be around when either the truckers, buses, or the fliers supplant the railways. I have occasionally traveled on both buses and planes and neither has given me the solid satisfaction and pleasure that a modern train provides. The rails still have and will have my undivided affection!"

Milk Adds Life

Americans drink the best fluid milk in the world because of its quality, and by quality is meant its goodness and tastiness as well as the valuable proteins, milk fat, milk sugar, minerals and vitamins that it contains.

The reputation and name that milk has acquired as "natures most nearly perfect food" has not been won by advertising or sales promotion, but because it has been demonstrated thousands of times, in all the homes of our fair land, that the best health in the average individual, or family has been attained thru the liberal use of milk and dairy products in planning the food budget.

What other food can compare with milk in supplying the necessary food elements in our daily diet?

Here is what one quart of the necessary daily food elements if you are an average adult

34% of the protein that builds muscles.

130% of the calcium that is needed for sound bones and teeth.

67% of the phosphorous, 3% of the iron, 30% of the vitamin a.

22% of the thiamin vitamin, 82 percent of the riboflavin, 19 percent of the ascorbic acid and 6 percent of the niacin. And besides all these your quart of milk supplies an average of 24 percent of the daily calorie requirement in the butterfat and milk sugar as well as numerous other menerals and vitamins.

You get all of the above for considerably less than 10 cents per pound for whole milk.

During June Dairy Month, get the milk and dairy product habit and your health and wealth will be enhanced thereby.

Remember that milk adds life.

Contour Wheat Fields

Contour-seeded wheat fields produce larger crops (about two-thirds bushel an acre more) than those seeded up and down the slope, say agronomists at the University of Illinois.

New Selling System Aids Hog Producers

Price Agreed Upon Right in The Pen

Under a new system of selling hogs, buyers and salesmen at the markets agree on the price right in the pen before the hogs are weighed. Thus the old weight-schedule is being replaced by a pen-to-pen system of marketing. The buyer is given a chance to recognize quality and pay a premium for good hogs.

The quality of this Chester White sow and litter is apparent even to the casual observer; but under the old weight-schedule of selling hogs, breeders who produce such quality stock would receive nothing extra for the added time and care they had expended to bring their hogs to such a degree of excellence.

The reason advanced for increased interest in marketing is that the weight-schedule system fails to recognize the difference between hogs. It also fails to pay for true quality.

Under the old schedule-selling, salesmen and buyers at a market would agree in the morning how many hogs each buyer would get. A schedule of process was set up according to weight. "Hogs was hogs" and the scales determined the price.

But that system is gradually being abandoned. Under the old method, farmers judged probable market prices by estimating the weight of their hogs. A premium of 50 cents per hundredweight was considered unusual at the market although the real value of hogs of the same weight varies as much as $5 or $6 per animal. Such premiums offered poor pay to the expert producer who raises top-quality hogs worth more money.

Another reason for the new system is the fear that if a better job of selling isn't done, hogs may be sold on a dressed-carcass basis. This method of marketing (which is used in Canada) is being explored by many farmers, cooperatives, agricultural experiment stations and studies under the federal research and marketing act. Many public market operators also are worried about the decline in volume of hogs arriving for sale at terminal markets.

Wheat Champions

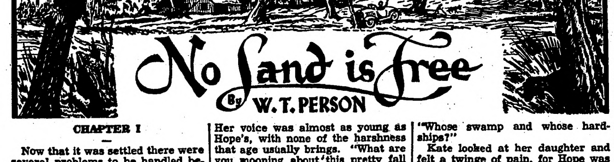
The wheat, which Victor Rasmussen is holding, is a sample of the crop from the 2,000 acres of wheat land, which is owned jointly by these two men and their brother Reuben, who was too busy farming that day to get in the picture.

The Rasmussens' wheat, which was hard red winter of the Cache variety with a test weight of 64 pounds per bushel, took first place in the 8th annual Philip W. Pillsbury judging for best United States wheat raised in 1948. The grain competed with 37 samples from 20 other states when the judging was held in Minneapolis.

The Rasmussens rotate their wheat crop on 4,000 acres of unirrigated land. They are the sons of Philip H. Rasmussen, who won the state and national Pillsbury award in 1946.

Soil Check May Answer Slow Tile Drain Puzzle

If tile-drained land is slow in drying, check the organic matter content of your soils before blaming the tile system. Many tile lines that worked well when originally laid are now hampered because the water can't get through the soil to the tile. You open your soil and improve drainage when you grow well-fertilized deep-rooted legumes in the rotation and put back straw, cornstalks and manure.



No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

CHAPTER I

Now that it was settled there were several problems to be handled before they moved from Harbisonville. One concerned Granny, who was frequently a difficult person to deal with because she did her own thinking—and sometimes that of others.

"I still think it might be better for her to go to Chicago," Kate Ives said for the umpteenth time. "She'd have every comfort there with Gertrude and Wilton, but—"

"Not every comfort," Andy broke in. "She'd never be in a very good humor around Wilton. She says he's as interesting as a toad, except that he doesn't have warts!"

Kate laughed, then quickly turned serious. "I'll have to talk with her right away, but I dread it! You know how she is, Andy."

He nodded. "If it's going to hurt her feelings, I say let her go with us. She'd rather do that, anyway. Why, she's just sixty-eight, and she can stand as much as most women between forty and fifty. If it's going to hurt her feelings, don't mention it to her; she's the best mother-in-law I've ever had."

"And it's such a coincidence that she's my mother too!" Kate wasn't convinced that she liked this brand of humor. "Andy, are you sure you've done the right thing? When I think of moving 'way off there and turning pioneer, I get shivers!"

Andy Ives, who had been a clerk in Jaynes' Hardware Store for nearly twenty unprogressive years, looked at her for a long moment without speaking. His keen blue eyes held a hard, almost fierce, light.

"We may get a lot more than shivers out of it, Kate. And I can't know until we've tried that I'm doing the right thing. But it'll be something else, and we'll be working for the kind of life I've wanted all these years." He leaned toward her, took her hands in his big, farm-bred fingers. "The Lord made a lot of acres, Kate, and I want some of them for my own—a place for Hope and Dave to call theirs someday, a place that will flourish according to the strength and thought we put into it. The land down there is rich and black and good. I think I've done the right thing. The question is, Are we the right people?"

Kate Ives had never been quite sure of Andy's wisdom in business matters. At times he seemed to be a dreamer. Gertrude, her sister in Chicago, whose husband, Wilton Warner, was a successful executive in the "Dusk to Dawn" Mattress Company and made enough money for them to afford an apartment from which they could see Lake Michigan, had never quite understood why Kate had married Andy. Of course, Gertrude had never come right out with it, for Gertrude was proud of her tact and the delicate subtlety with which she could project her disapprovals; but Kate had long known that in Gertrude's view Andy was not a complex form of life.

Granny Approves Of Her Son-in-Law

Of late years Andy had been hearing of free land in the state—a great lowland region a hundred miles south of Harbisonville, in the flat, black cotton country of southern Arkansas—which was being parceled out to those who paid a small fee and agreed to live on the land two years, making certain simple improvements. Yet she had never dreamed that a man as cautious as Andy would tear loose from the security, even the static, humdrum security of Harbisonville, and take up a tract of that land. But he had done it! And now they were going to move from staid Harbisonville, from the bungalow where Hope and Dave had been born and had grown up, to the swamp country southeast of Newcastle, where they would begin a new life, perhaps a very difficult and strange life!

She was standing at the window after Andy had gone off to work that November morning, looking out at the autumn-daubed world, thinking about it. She must tell her mother today, and she must be tactful about it. How could they haul Granny off to the swamp for a pioneer life when the old lady could live in a warm apartment in Chicago, high enough above the ground to reflect Wilton's prosperity and offer a pleasant view of Lake Michigan?

Mrs. Craig came into the living room, slender and straight, in black, wearing her usual high white lace collar and yellow-gold watch pinned high on her bosom. Her bearing gave an impression of height, just as her manner of dressing gave her the air of a patrician; yet she was neither tall nor very patrician. Her face, untouched with cosmetics, was finely wrinkled; her nose was straight and well-bridged; her eyes were level and clear, dark brown; she had thin lips, but not too thin for a quick smile; her cheeks were firm, with no hint of sagging at any point. She and the years she had spent had apparently got along very well.

"Good morning, Kate," she said. Her voice was almost as young as Hope's, with none of the harshness that age usually brings. "What are you mooning about this pretty fall morning?"

"Oh, why, nothing, of course! How are you, mother?"

"Ready for breakfast. Have you and Andy eaten?"

"Some time ago." She turned and started for the kitchen. "I'll fix your egg. Want it poached this morning?"

"If so I'll poach it. Go back to your window." She chuckled. "Standing there that way, you reminded me of the day before you married Andy. You were so worried! But you got a good, steady man, Kate, bless his heart!"

"You like Andy, don't you?"

"If you had to do it over and turned him down, I'd take a barrel stave to you!" Mrs. Craig said gently. "Go call Hope, and I'll get her breakfast too. Where's the apron?"

"On the pantry door." Kate started out, to call Hope, who had been to a dance the night before, then stopped and turned back. Now was the time to talk with her mother, before Hope came in. She bit her lip and wondered how to start.

"We're going to move, honey," Kate told her.

"What is it?" Mrs. Craig asked, noting her daughter's expression. "What are you thinking?"

"We may be moving before long, mother. I want to tell you—"

"Fine!" the old lady cut in. "Where to?"

"Well, Andy has always wanted a farm, you know, and now he has paid the fee on a quarter section of state land, with a two-room cabin on it, where we can set up housekeeping. We'll move before the month is out."

"Well, gentle rivers!" the old lady exclaimed. "Wonderful! The emancipation of Andrew Ives!"

"There will be terrible hardships, mother. It's down in the swamp country, southwest of Newcastle. It's out in the wilds, thinly settled, and—and—Well, I'm just wondering if we ought to subject you to the hardships ahead of us, mother."

The old lady stiffened as if slapped. "I understand what you're getting at," she said quickly. "Have you written Gertrude yet?"

Hope Is Happy Over the Farm

Kate Ives flushed a little. "No, I haven't. You know I wouldn't write Gertrude about it before talking with you, don't you?"

"Well, I certainly didn't think so. Now, you listen to me, Kate. I can take as many hardships as you can, and you know I'd get a job washing dishes and keeping house for somebody before I'd go up north and live in the same house with that smug, tiresome mattress peddler Gertrude married!"

"Mother! Don't talk like that! I just thought—"

"All right, don't you talk like that either. Look here, I've been with you and Andy since your father died, and I've helped bring up Dave and Hope, and my place is with you all. Don't you be thinking for a minute that I'd traipse off up to Chicago to dry up and die in some stuffy apartment, with never a chance to walk in the mud or to feed chickens or to hear a cowbell at night or a hound trailing just before sunup! I'm a human being, Kate Ives! I'm not a bit afraid of your swamp and your hardships!"

"What on earth?" asked Hope, who had reached the door just in time to catch Granny's last words. "Whose swamp and whose hardships?"

Kate looked at her daughter and felt a twinge of pain, for Hope was too pretty to be hidden in a swamp, torn loose from her circle of friends, removed from her admirers to a place where there would probably be no worthy admirers to replace them. Hope was vividly attractive, with gray eyes and curly dark-brown hair. She could have Wall Harbison, cashier of Harbisonville Bank and Trust, if she wanted him. "But I don't want him," she had told Kate on the morning after his third proposal. "He'll be bald before he's thirty-five, and he has ancestors." Kate had pointed out that this was normal, particularly in view of the fact that Wall was a Harbison and must be expected to have ancestors. "But his are ingrown!" Hope had informed her, ending rather neatly Kate Ives' faint hope that a great love might bud and give them a connection not only with a prosperous bank but also with the founding family of the town. It was disappointing to learn that Hope's dread of having a bald husband was so keen. There were many worse afflictions than baldness. Stuffiness, for example, or chinlessness.

"What are you talking about?" Hope insisted, when her mother began hedging, not wishing to break the news of the move. "Whose swamp and whose hardships, I repeat?"

"We're going to move, honey," Kate told her. "I was just telling Granny that—"

"Move?" Hope yipped, flinging back a swirl of shining hair that had swung across one cheek. "For heaven's sake, where? And when? Isn't this rather sudden?"

"It's been brewing for years. All your life you've heard your father talk of wanting a farm of his own, haven't you? Well, we're going to have one."

"You make it sound so simple! All at once we're going to have a farm. Just like that! As easy as ordering it from Sears!"

Kate explained the arrangement. "It's free land, you see. Except for the few dollars we've put into the fee, all we have to do now to make it ours is to work."

"At last!" Hope said gladly. "Now dad can work for himself, instead of handling bolts and nuts, hoes and rakes and plowpoints for the other fellow! It's wonderful!"

"There won't be much for you down there," Kate said slowly. "If you'd rather, you can get a job and stay here, where you've friends and recreations and—"

"—and die of homesickness for the rest of you!" Hope cut in. "Stay here? I'm going too, and don't think you can park me in Harbisonville while the rest of you sail off to the great adventure! Why, I'll outpioneer Priscilla herself!"

Women Plan a Pioneer Life

"And who knows?" Granny asked, a light in her eye. "Maybe there'll be a John Alden down there in the swamp country." Then the old lady shrugged and laughed without mirth, spoke to Hope: "She tried to persuade me against going. Imagine that! Hardships! Why, many's the hardship I've caught by the tail and swung around my head three times before throwing it over the mountain."

Hope laughed. "Have you told Dave yet?" she asked her mother.

"Dad's going to tell him at noon, when he comes by the store, on his way home from school. It will make Dave very happy, I know. What could please a gangling, freckled boy of sixteen more than going into a wilderness where there are deer, wild turkey, fish, coons—?"

"Is it that wild?" Hope broke in. "Really deer and turkey and all that?"

"Rattlesnakes too," Kate added, "and mosquitoes, frogs, and maybe an alligator now and then. Dad says it's primitive."

"Dave can wear a coonskin cap and be our young Leatherstocking Ives!" Hope mused. "What of neighbors? Will we have any two-legged ones?"

"I don't know about that part of it," Kate told her, "but from what I gather, we'll have room to turn around, and just worlds of privacy! You two get your breakfast now. I've broken the news. Next month we may be living on possum and squirrel, so enjoy your civilized rations while you can."

When Andy told Dave at noon, the boy was happy. They were walking home to lunch, and Dave was telling about their first basketball practice the afternoon before, and of his hopes of being star forward on the Harbisonville High team. It seemed very important to him. Andy listened patiently until they had passed the City Wholesale Grocery warehouse, and then he broke the boy's chatter, saying gravely:

"You won't be on the basketball team much longer, son. I've something to tell you."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Issue Is Joined on Labor Measure; Senate Group Okays Atlantic Pact; Unemployment Increasing in Nation

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

LABOR BILL:

Issue Is Joined

The long-awaited fight on repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law had begun. Debate had started in the senate with Chairman Elbert D. Thomas (D., Utah) of the labor committee opening for the administration. Government forces were committed to an attempt for outright repeal of the measure, but all indications pointed to a compromise or nothing.

Meanwhile, John L. Lewis declared that the AFL and CIO had betrayed organized labor's cause by reportedly agreeing to a compromise.

Urging adoption of the administration bill. Thomas said the voters last November "decided the Taft-Hartley law was a mistake." The administration seeks to replace it with a modified version of the New Deal Wagner act. Thomas called for quick repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

In telegrams to all 96 senators, Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers union, said he had heard AFL and CIO leaders had agreed to accept four "oppressive amendments" to the administration bill.

An AFL official pooh-poohed Lewis' charges of a secret deal. As a matter of fact, he said, the AFL convention in Cleveland recently agreed to accept the four amendments that "horrified" Lewis.

These four amendments called for:

1. Power for the federal government to seize plants involved in national-emergency strikes.
2. The filing of financial returns by unions.
3. The filing of non-Communist and non-Fascist affidavits by workers and employers alike.
4. A guarantee of free speech in labor relations.

ARTICLE 5:

What Import?

The senate foreign relations committee, in reporting favorably the North Atlantic pact, had almost bogged down on Article 5. That is the proviso in the pact which binds signatories to the rule that an attack on one pact member would be an attack upon all, and binds each to take such action as is deemed necessary, "including the use of armed forces" to restore and maintain the security of the area.

THE WORDING of Article 5 created in some minds a fear that its effect would nullify the right of congress to declare war and might put this power arbitrarily into the hands of the President.

Senator George (D., Ga.) who had expressed concern about the interpretation of Article 5, finally said that he was satisfied that under it the President could not declare war nor "employ troops to enforce any particular action aimed at certain European countries without congressional approval."

Senator Pepper (D., Fla.) took the same tack. He said the provision neither adds to nor subtracts from the war powers of the President as commander-in-chief.

EVEN SO, it was a difficult point. The extent to which a President might go toward involvement in war was dramatically disclosed in the Roosevelt administration when the commander-in-chief admittedly committed the nation to "everything short of war" in what was purported to be an attempt to avoid war. Under such a policy actions may go so far at the chief executive level that there would be nothing left for the congress to do but declare war in a situation in which it had no authority and no voice.

NEW WEAPON:

Top Secret

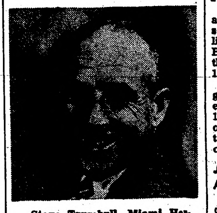
What is being produced at the plutonium plant at Hanford, Washington?

NO one would say, but Carleton Shugg, deputy general manager of the atomic energy commission, said the plant was handling a "product that needs a better name than 'deadly poison.'"

Was it the weird "atomic fog" about which there had been so much speculation? Shugg wouldn't say. He said, instead, that he was merely discussing certain phases in the production of plutonium—one of two fissionable materials used in making atom bombs. The other is uranium-235.

SHUGG'S statement was made during his testimony before a senate appropriations subcommittee during the congressional investigation of the atomic program.

Barred



Steve Trumbull, Miami Herald reporter, was barred from the Florida state senate chamber after he questioned the manner in which a bill was brought before the senate. It was reported his cheekbone was fractured when he was struck by a senator.

UNEMPLOYMENT:

Sudden Increase

Whatever its significance, many economists were expressing concern over a sudden upswing in the number of unemployed in the nation.

BETWEEN April and May, the number of U.S. jobless had increased by 273,000 to bring the totally unemployed to a probable postwar high of more than 3.25 million. These figures were released by the federal bureau of the census.

The rise in the unemployment figure at a time when it usually drops might be attributed, the bureau said, to the sudden rush of students for summer or permanent jobs. The bureau did say that two-thirds of the increase in unemployment could be traced to "young persons of high school and college age."

AT the same time, the bureau reported, total unemployment was rising, principally as a result of seasonal activity on farms.

Despite the conflicting reports, there were some among the country's industrial and economic leaders who feared the unemployment situation might grow worse before getting any better.

SOVIETS:

Appraise Guests

In Moscow the Literary Gazette sought to evaluate for its readers the Russian appraisal of foreign diplomats and newspapermen who live in the Soviet Union.

THE Gazette printed a poem written by Sergei Mikhalkov, children's poet, playwright and co-author of the Soviet national anthem.

Translated freely, Sergei's poem went this way:

"We met them, you and I.
"These friends who aren't friends.
"The jackal, wolf and swine,
"And journalistic snake.
"In other words, those who are being sent here.
"We know them all and can recognize them.
"Even if we aren't doctors."

NATURALLY, there will be no comment from the pilloried—not while they're still in Russia.

HEART STUDY:

Artificials Used

Emphasis in heart study now rests in the development of artificial hearts. Dr. Alfred Blalock of Baltimore, widely-known blue-baby specialist, was the authority for the statement.

SPEAKING at a general scientific session of the American Medical association, Blalock said: "The most interesting thing in surgery, but still in the experimental stage, is the development of mechanical devices as substitutes for the heart."

He reported that he considered as most promising a pump developed by Dr. John Gibbon at the Jefferson school of Philadelphia.

"Dr. Gibbon's pump will pump blood as the heart does," Dr. Blalock explained. "He is working on an artificial lung to aerate the blood."

BLALOCK said Dr. Gibbon's pump replaced the heart of a dog for 48 minutes and the dog recovered.

"If one can substitute for the heart for 30 to 45 minutes, one can open it and see what one is working at," he said. "With a heart substitute we can do more things inside the heart."

ARMY BOSS:

Was Buck Private

The cinderella story would take on new interest for the GI's in Uncle Sam's army.

And there was a particular reason. Gordon Gray, a one-time buck private in the army, was nominated by President Truman to be secretary of the army.

GRAY, now undersecretary, is 40 years old, a North Carolina publisher and lawyer. He has been acting secretary since the resignation of Kenneth C. Royall on April 27.

Gray, born in Baltimore, is not an army career man. But he served three years in the army, enlisting as a buck private in 1942. But he had something on the ball then, and rose to captain with the 12th army group in Europe.

THE new secretary would be the government's youngest head of an executive department. For the past 16 months Gray has been the army official responsible for the industrial mobilization and procurement official of his department.

JOHN L. LEWIS:

A Severe Blow

A federal district court of appeals dealt a heavy blow at John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers. Lewis and his union, found guilty of contempt of court for failing to call off the 1948 coal strike, had been fined $1,420,000.

They appealed. The higher court upheld the finding and indications were that Lewis and his attorneys would lose no time appealing to the United States supreme court for a final decision.

THE CASE grew out of Lewis' defiance of the Taft-Hartley law last year for ignoring a court order issued under the law that directed the miners to call off a month-old strike in the soft coal fields.

The district appeals court ruling made it clear that the decision was based on the fact that Lewis and the miners waited until the demands were met before finally calling off the strike when they had been previously directed by the court to do so.

Justice E. Barrett Prettyman said on behalf of the court:

"THE SUPREME COURT (has) held . . . involving these same appellants, that he who fails to obey a court order . . . is punishable for criminal contempt. That decision governs us here."

The supreme court already had upheld the conviction of Lewis and his miners for defying a similar court order in the 1946 coal strike. It was that ruling to which Judge Prettyman referred.

NAZI "WITCH":

Not Through Yet

Ilse Koch, called the "witch" of Buchenwald, infamous German prison camp of World War II, definitely was to face a German court on charges of mistreating Germans at the concentration camp.

ONCE sentenced to life imprisonment by American occupation force verdict on charges of unspeakable cruelties to prisoners, Ilse had her term commuted to only four years by U.S. Gen. Lucius D. Clay on grounds of insufficient evidence.

Among other charges she faced was one of having made lampshades out of human skin.

The announcement that Ilse would have to stand trial again was made in Munich by an official of the Bavarian ministry of justice.

THE U.S. authorities have turned over to German officials the records of the case in order that they might determine whether she could be tried by the Germans for mistreating their own citizens at Buchenwald, where she was the wife of the Nazi commandant.

Top Man

Top man in the graduating class at West Point, U.S. military academy, Richard T. Carvolth, Peckville, Pa., had his choice of any arm of the military services. He chose the air force and here adjusts his second lieutenant's bars on his brand new uniform.

JET FIGHTER:

Tests Complete

The United States air force was proud of its newest jet fighter—the Lockheed F-90, which had successfully completed its flight tests at the Muroc flight test base in California.

There was an air of secrecy about the plane's performance. Some facts which did emerge were: The plane weighs 26,000 pounds, climbed 15,000 feet in 10 minutes, but that wasn't its maximum, the pilot said.

AMA GAGS FISHBEIN

Famed Doctor-Editor's Authority Clipped

The red-hot issue between the American Medical association and the administration over the President's proposed compulsory health plan was coming to a boil. The AMA, obviously wishing to retain its own identity in matters of policy statements, clapped a gag on Dr. Morris Fishbein, one of medicine's most famous figures. The board ordered him to stop writing or speaking on anything except medicine.

That meant he could not talk publicly on state medicine nor on the political issues boiling up in the AMA's campaign against the Truman national health insurance plan. Dr. Fishbein is editor of the Journal of the American Medical association. He held no official position beyond that.

U.S. Agriculture Makes Fabulous Record in 1948

For United States agriculture, 1948 will go down in history as a fabulous year, according to the 1949 Britannica Book of the Year.

"It was a year without a crop scare, with numerous record and near record yields achieved; the corn crop was more than 10 per cent above the previous record and fully 50 per cent above the previous year; the wheat crop was the second largest on record and the fifth consecutive crop of more than a billion bushels, one of the five largest wheat crops the country had ever produced; the cotton crop was one-fourth larger than in the previous year."

Prices, too, reached a record level in January, 1948, though they then broke sharply and continued to decline as 1948 crops were harvested, the new Britannica yearbook records.

"In spite of the break in prices, the volume of agricultural marketings was such as to provide a gross income to farmers of almost 35 billion dollars slightly exceeding the 1947 record," the publication continues. "However, because of higher costs of production the realized net income had been declining since 1947."

Wheat for Breakfast

Wheat made its debut as a breakfast cereal when the caveman found wild wheat growing as he prowled his way through the primitive world. A tentative tasting of the kernels of the wild wheat converted him into a cereal eater, and it turned him into a farmer, too. So well did the caveman like the wild wheat that he stored it against the winter's famine.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

41 Per Cent of Land In U. S. in Herbage

Grass Top Resource, Cattlemen Assert

Grass is one of the greatest resources of this nation. In the United States there are approximately 779 million acres of land which will grow nothing but hay, grass and other herbage unfit for human consumption.

This great acreage represents 41 per cent of the total land of the nation. About 9 per cent of the lands in the United States are plowable but are used also to produce pasture, hay or forage crops. It can be concluded, therefore, that about 50 per cent of the United States would not be used if it were not for meat animals.

This little fellow, obviously so well-started in life, is symbolical of what good pasturage can mean to cattle and just how much cattle depend on grass. In the United States there are approximately 779 million acres of land which cannot grow anything but hay, grass and other herbage.

Of the total feeds consumed by beef cattle 78.7 per cent is grass, hay and dry roughage. A minimum of grain is needed to bring feeder steers from 700 pounds to 1,000 pounds when the principal part of the ration is made up of hay, ensilage or other roughage.

The process of producing beef cattle normally involves the following steps:

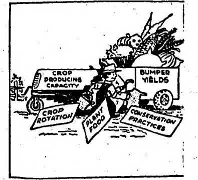
1. The purebred operator who produces the sires and females which are the foundation of beef animal production. This branch of the cattle industry is one that requires heavy investment and efficiency in management.

2. The commercial breeder who produces the calves which are the offspring of commercial herds of female and purebred sires.

3. The pasture cattleman who grows the animal from the weaning or yearling stage to two years old, taking his profit from the poundage gained on grass and hay.

4. The feeder who "finishes" the animal from grass stage to slaughter condition, disposing of a large percentage of roughage.

Crop Rotation



Crop rotation with deep-rooted legumes, plant food and good management methods are the "gas, oil and lubricants" that keep your soil's crop producing machine going on high.

Each of these has a job to do. Each needs help from the others. They all have to work like a team.

Valuable as a good rotation is in balancing soil-building legume crops against soil-robbing row crops, it has to be backed up by wise land management methods. Cropping in even the best rotation drains the soil's supply of phosphate and potash.

And even if your good management program puts back every scrap of barnyard manure, plows under the legumes and returns straw, corn stalks and crop aftermath to the soil, you still ship away hundreds of pounds of plant food in the grain, beef and milk you sell every year.

Good Pasture Increases Dairy Herd Production

With 2.5 million fewer cows on farms now than in 1945, possibilities for profit in dairying are greater if labor-saving, high value pasture is the center of the production program. Good pasture can increase milk output and cut production costs. That means a bigger profit margin. Getting bigger pasture yields is a matter of feeding the soil plant nutrients so it can feed legume-grass mixtures.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Tired of working as a clerk in a hardware store for 20 years, Andy Ives suggests to his wife, Kate, that they move from Harbisonville to a grant of free land in the flat, black cotton country of southern Arkansas which is parceled out to those who pay a small fee and agree to live on the land two years, making certain improvements. Andy's family, including his young son, Dave, daughter, Hope, and mother-in-law, who they all call "Granny," approves the idea of modern pioneering and are eager to try their hand at making a comfortable home out of piece of land in the wilderness. Kate feels it is an injustice to "bury" a pretty girl like Hope, but the girl refuses to stay behind.

CHAPTER II

Dave was so startled that he lost step, but hitched and caught it again. "What do you mean?" he blurted. "Why can't I play basketball? Have I got to work afternoons?"

"We're leaving here," his father said. "We're leaving before the month is out, and where we're going you won't have much interest in basketball for a while."

"Leaving Harbisonville?" Again Dave lost step, then caught it determinedly. "Say, where're we goin', pop—I mean, dad? You got a better job somewhere?"

"Much better." Then Andy Ives told his boy what lay ahead of them, and why he had made the break. "We'll have a world of work to do, Dave, and it'll be hard work; but what we make will be ours, and we'll get ahead according to our labor and common sense. How do you feel about it?"

"Well—I—I don't know. I like the fellows here. They're the only ones I've ever known, and—well, it'll be strange somewhere else. Will I go to school down there?"

"Maybe not the rest of this fall and winter," Andy said slowly. "There'll be so much to do. Next year, though."

"You say it's wild country?" Dave broke in. "There'll be good hunting and fishing?"

"Plenty of it. But there'll be precious little time for those things for a while. We'll have to work, Dave. It'll take hard, backbreaking work to make a farm like we want out of that wilderness."

"I can work," Dave said simply. Out of the corner of his eye, he reviewed the fact that he was almost as tall as his father. He took a deep breath, swelling his chest, and felt good over the "we" that his dad had used. "I can do a man's work," he said, and flexed arm and shoulder muscles by way of assurance that he had stamina and strength aplenty.

This attention to the physical side of things made him lose step again, but he hitched into a half-step and fell in with his father's pace.

The table was lively at noon that day, for everyone knew of the venture now and all were talking excitedly.

"We'll have a huge white house with big columns," Hope predicted, "and a park for a front yard. We'll call it 'Ives Acres.'"

"We'll have only a hundred and sixty acres," Andy reminded her. "Don't dream on too big a scale."

"Oh, we'll buy more land, then more," she said gaily. "We'll want an estate, won't we? And you'll want to be called a planter instead of a farmer. Takes a lot of land for that, you know."

"She wants to be a Scarlet O'Hara of the swamps," Dave put in. "Gal, you'd better come down to earth; you'll skin your nose on a cloud."

"Don't call me 'Gal'!" Hope flared.

"I should say not," Granny backed her up. "Hope is a young lady, Dave, and a very nice, pretty one, I'll have you know."

"Yes'm." Dave grinned at Hope, who had flushed pleasantly under Granny's tribute. "I take back the 'Gal,'" he said.

The Piano Proves A Discordant Note

Andy was already making plans for the move. I've spoken to Joe Wilson about his truck," he said. "We can get it. Two of Joe's hired boys will drive the truck, and we'll all go down in the car together." He paused, looking about the table, and they knew he had a little bombshell to toss. "I plan to sell the car down there," he added calmly.

"To sell the car?" Kate asked in amazement. "What will we do without it, Andy?"

"Considerable walking," he informed her. "Look, everybody," he hurried on, noting Hope's look of pain and Dave's startled expression, "we'll need a lot of things to start off down there. Tools, mules, a wagon, some fertilizer in the spring, and—"

"I thought it was rich land," Kate broke in. "Why use fertilizer?"

"No need to strain the soil right at the beginning," Andy said dryly. "Furthermore, we'll have to build a house, have a well driven, build a barn, and—well, there's just about everything to be done. Besides, I can get more for the old car now than ever before, and maybe ever again, and it's the time to sell it. We're going to go rock-bottom for a while. Anyway, who ever heard of pioneers having a car?"

"America's last frontier!" Kate mused. "We must have Gertrude and Wilton come down and visit us at Ives Acres."

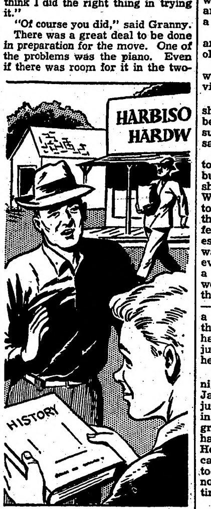
Dave laughed loudly and took another large helping of peas. "Wouldn't they turn up their noses then, at us poor folks?"

Granny sniffed. "Better advise Gertrude to have Wilton bring one of his best mattresses down. We'll be sleeping on shucks, if we raise any corn. I can imagine that pampered ox sleeping on a shuck mattress and sneezing every time he turned over, because of the dust!"

"All joking aside," Andy said earnestly. "I'm proud that you're with me on this deal. It won't be a lot of fun, I'm telling you, but there'll be times when we'll laugh. It's a big job we're tackling, but I'm tired, worn-out, and disgusted with the little job I've had all these years, and whether I fail or succeed down there in the swamp country, I'll still think I did the right thing in trying it."

"Of course you did," said Granny.

There was a great deal to be done in preparation for the move. One of the problems was the piano. Even if there was room for it in the two-room cabin that awaited them in the swamp, Andy gravely doubted that the frail floor would support its weight. But Kate's sentiment for the old, scarred upright was an obstacle to Andy's practicality. They had bought it second hand when Hope was five. In those days Kate had been sure that Hope was extremely talented, and they had skimped and sacrificed in order to make the payments on it. For years it had represented a fond dream—had been a pleasure too. Although Hope had never progressed beyond a stirring arrangement of "Country Gardens" and the playing of "The Minute Waltz" in approximately two minutes, she could accompany well; and there had been many evenings when Andy and Kate had harmonized on "In the Gloaming" and "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," Hope playing for them. Kate could play a little too, by ear better than by note, and at times when she felt moody she turned to the old piano.



"We're leaving before the month is out, and where we're going you won't have much interest in basketball for a while."

"And we won't fail. Don't talk of failing, Andy Ives!"

"All right. I won't any more."

"I just couldn't bear to leave it, Andy," she said. "I can't help it if it's too heavy for you and Dave to handle alone, or if there's no room for it down there, or it may break the floor in, or if we could sell it for enough to buy two plows. I just can't think of a home without a piano."

"Little as that cabin is," Andy pointed out, "you'll be thinking of a piano without a home if we take it. Look, Kate, this is no time for sentiment of this kind; we're up against realities."

"Sentiment is a reality," she said firmly. "We'll just have to take the piano. That's all there is to it."

So, Andy knew that when the time came they would take the piano.

Hope Wants Love Instead of Money

There were several other things to sell, not only for the sake of room in their new quarters, but because they wouldn't be usable down there. The refrigerator, for instance, and all electrical appliances. There was no current in the swamp. Andy said that there was talk of running a line out through that area, from Newcastle over to highway 142, and that in time they might be hooked up with it; but no one knew when that would be. Until it happened, they would have to use oil lamps, and they'd have ice only when they hauled it eight miles out from Newcastle. This outlook was rather dismal for Kate, who had never been without electricity.

"And besides," Dave said, "we can get a battery set sometime. They're pretty good."

When Andy gave Mr. Jaynes notice that he would soon be leaving, the word got out that the Iveses were moving from Harbisonville, and friends came to express regrets. People who hadn't been in the Ives residence in two or three years came now to have their graceful say.

"Of course, we just don't have time to visit these days, Kate, and we just don't go to see anybody, but we've known you were here, and we hate to think of your leaving. We'll miss you just dreadfully."

"We'll miss being here, too," Kate would say, "but it's time we struck out for something of our own. Andy has been in a rut there so long, with Mr. Jaynes. And the children are big enough now for us to take a chance, so—"

"But you'll have to come back and see us. Don't ever forget your old friends here."

"Oh, we won't do that! After all, we've lived a long time in Harbisonville."

And so it went. Kate knew how shallow the regrets of many must be, but she met their moods and suffered with them in their sudden sadness.

Hope knew that she would have to say no to Wall Harbison again, but that would be easy, even though she was a bit proud of the fact that Wall wanted her. Not many girls in town would have refused Wall and the material blessings he could offer, including the tradition of a well-established, enterprising family. It was not that Hope thought she would ever have a better chance to get a dependable husband and a solid, well-founded home; it was, rather, that she was honest—perhaps naive—about certain things. Hope was a romantic; she believed that when the right man came along she would have no doubts whatever, and that just being near him would make her heart act strangely.

Wall did propose again, on the night of the day Andy gave Mr. Jaynes notice. He said: "Hope, I just can't let you go off down there in the swamp, burying yourself and grubbing away at work you don't have to do. Come on, marry me, Hope. I'll give you every reason I can find to make you happy." He took her hand gently. "You may not love me now, but you will in time. Say yes, Hope."

"No," said Hope, withdrawing her hand. "It wouldn't be right. There's a certain way I must feel about the man I marry, and I don't feel that way about you. I like you, and I think you're nice, but, well, there's just something—"

"O. K. I won't ask you again until I think you're ready to say yes. Look, Hope, you can have a place in the bank and stay here. You know people in Harbisonville, and you're popular. It's not right for you to go down there in the backwoods and—"

"But I want to go, Wall," she broke in. "That's it. I'd be miserable if I let them go off down there without me. Oh, I know you can't see it, but wherever dad and mother and Dave and Granny are is the place for me. And don't feel sorry for me or worry about me, either. We're all in this venture together, to sink or swim."

Wall shrugged. "All right. I hope you swim!"

Moving day was bright and clear and cold.

Granny Scoffs At City Life

Granny had the air of being very sure of herself. She was. If she had had any doubts whatever of the wisdom of remaining with Andy and Kate, the letter she had received from Gertrude the day before had removed those doubts. That letter had not left any latchstrings dangling carelessly about:

"Wilton and I naturally are intrigued by this return to nature that Andy and Kate are planning, and we are almost envious of their bravery in attempting such a thing at their ages. Wilton asks if the fishing for largemouth is good down there, and says tell Andy and Dave to stake out a few big ones for him to catch some day when vacations are in vogue again. You know how Wilton loves the great outdoors, but the poor dear is so terribly busy that he never gets to enjoy roughing it any more. I'll be so glad when he retires, so that we can have a big, roomy house of our own, instead of a cramped apartment. When that time comes, we'll expect you to spend some time with us, mother."

Granny had laughed shortly at that. "You see," she had said in showing the letter to Kate, "how cramped they are for room. What if I had planned to go up there with them?"

Kate stood on the porch and watched the heavily loaded truck ease slowly out of the front yard. A lump rose into her throat. She swallowed hard against it and blinked back tears. It was the first sadness she had felt about the new venture.

If a vacuum cleaner must pick up pins and threads, its efficiency is bound to go down. When a cleaner has caught up thread and hairs in the brush, take a moment to cut them out. Artificial Breeding

A desirable proved sire is a bull whose daughter's records, when compared with their dams, indicate he can transmit a high level of production. Such bulls are very scarce; only through artificial insemination can their ability be fully utilized. It is possible by artificial breeding to get 1,000 or more calves from one bull in a year, as compared with about 50 by natural breeding.

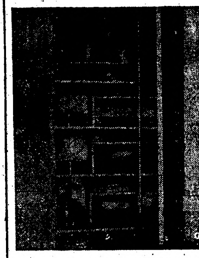
Step Shelves Save Space In Cupboards



"PROBLEM CUPBOARDS" with deep shelves are wasteful of space," writes Rose S. Florea, in nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer.

"A section of step shelves or narrow straight shelves between wide ones gives more space," she writes in the magazine read by 1,300,000 farm families. "Little stacking is necessary. Such shelves use the space between articles on a shelf and the shelf above. They are easily constructed to fit any cabinet and can be made from scrap lumber."

Milk Adds Life

Americans drink the best fluid milk in the world because of its quality, and by quality is meant its goodness and tastiness as well as the valuable proteins, milk fat, milk sugar, minerals and vitamins that it contains.

The reputation and name that milk has acquired as "natures most nearly perfect food" has not been won by advertising or sales promotion, but because it has been demonstrated thousands of times, in all the homes of our fair land, that the best health in the average individual, or family has been attained thru the liberal use of milk and dairy products in planning the food budget.

What other food can compare with milk in supplying the necessary food elements in our daily diet?

Here is what one quart of the necessary daily food elements if you are an average adult.

34% of the protein that builds muscles.

130% of the calcium that is needed for sound bones and teeth.

167% of the phosphorous, 3% of the iron, 30% of the vitamin a.

22% of the thiamin vitamin, 82 percent of the riboflavin, 19 percent of the ascorbic acid and 6 percent of the niacin. And besides all these your quart of milk supplies an average of 24 percent of the daily calorie requirement in the butterfat and milk sugar as well as numerous other menerals and vitamins.

You get all of the above for considerably less than 10 cents per pound for whole milk.

During June Dairy Month, get the milk and dairy product habit and your health and wealth will be enhanced thereby.

Remember that milk adds life.

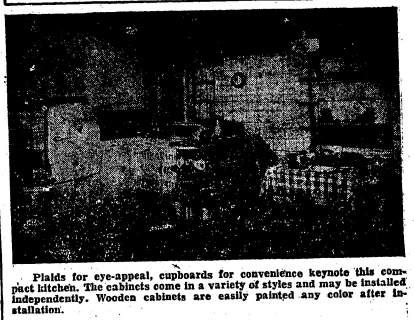
Today's Kitchen Is Attractive and Efficient



Plaids for eye-appeal, cupboards for convenience keynote this compact kitchen. The cabinets come in a variety of styles and may be installed independently. Wooden cabinets are easily painted any color after installation.

BECAUSE the kitchen is not only the homemaker's principal workroom but the heart of the home as well, it must not only be efficient but attractive as well, the Rural Home editor of nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer points out.

Appliances—the supporting cast to the homemaker's star role—have been vastly improved, she writes. They make work easier, cleaner and save time. Ranges, refrigerators and sinks have been precision-built. They include automatic features that take over much tedious responsibility and give improved results.

"Much of our modern equipment in kitchens is being installed rather than built in," she declares. "Some manufacturers of ranges and refrigerators now have kitchen units complete with various types of cabinets and base units. These may be installed or removed independently of other pieces in the same room. When an entire kitchen cannot be purchased outright, it may be gotten a piece at a time. These units may be grouped in almost any number of arrangements, depending on size of family, the kitchen and the pocketbook."

A workable kitchen must have each piece of equipment placed in relation to other pieces, she adds. Then work moves smoothly and easily with a minimum of wasted effort.

RED CHINA:

Quiescent

Communism, like the worm in the bud, was creeping swiftly through China as the presence of the Red conquerors began to make itself felt.

At one village meeting in northern China, a man, bewildered and dismayed by the use of the Russian hammer-and-sickle flag in Chinese Communist meetings and parades, ventured to rise and ask a question:

"WHY IS THIS DONE?" he said. "Russia is a foreign country and we are Chinese."

And the presiding political commissar snapped, "This subject is not on the agenda."

About the only thing that did show up on the agenda throughout the country was the puzzled but ready acquiescence of the Chinese to Communist rule.

As a result, the nation appeared to be well on its way to assuming a regular orbit as a willing satellite of Russia.

FOR THE MOST PART there have been no signs of coercion or compulsion in the relationship. There is every evidence that the Chinese Communists are in fact eager to follow the dictates of Moscow. And that revelation should be enough to destroy any illusion that the Chinese Communists are just simple agrarian reformers.

They are whole-hearted, completely dogmatic Communists, following the doctrines laid down by Karl Marx and adapted for 20th century application by his disciples, Lenin and Stalin—and by Mao Tze-tung, leader of China's Communists.

THERE IS as yet no conclusive evidence that the Kremlin is giving direct, active aid to the Chinese Communists. But the affinity and spirit of cooperation that exists between Moscow and Peiping, capital of Communist China, is tangible enough.

The application of China's internal situation to the rest of the world is disturbingly clear: Through the rule of Mao Tze-tung and his party, China inevitably is becoming a massive extension of the Soviet power-bloc.

PRICE SUPPORT:

Smoke, Smoke, Smoke

Arrangements for new price support programs for tobacco were announced by the federal department of agriculture.

THE government will make loans on flue-cured tobacco at 90 per cent of the parity price—as it was June 15. Loans on burley and other types of tobacco would be at the September 15 parity price, except fire-cured tobacco, which would be 75 per cent of the burley rate, and dark air-cured tobacco 66⅔ per cent of the burley rate.

(Parity is a price based on the relationship between prices of the things the farmers have to buy and prices of the products they sell. The government uses a basing period during which this relationship of prices gave the farmer what it considers a "fair profit").

THE RATES a pound at which the support prices will be paid was to be announced in July for flue-cured tobacco and for other types in October.

The full loans will be made only to tobacco growers who do not grow more tobacco than they are permitted under marketing quotas. These quotas have been set up for flue-cured, burley, fire-cured and dark, air-cured tobaccos. There are no quotas on other types.

Didn't Like It

Lewis L. Strauss (left) member of the atomic energy commission, confers with Chairman David E. Lilienthal after Strauss had told a congressional committee he had not approved shipment of isotopes to "friendly" nations abroad. He was called to the chair over protests of Lilienthal who said, "It is unusual to start with dissenting views."

BUDGET TRIM:

Asked of Truman

Congress apparently wasn't fooling about its demands for more economy in government. Nineteen senators, representing both major parties joined in sponsoring a resolution directing President Truman to cut federal spending by amounts from two million to four million dollars. The reductions would be made in funds provided for the new fiscal year, which begins officially on July first of each year.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

GOP Leaders Rap Demo Depression And Plan Bill to Meet Situation; Brannan Plan Held Farm Vote 'Bait'

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FARM VOTE:

Bait Is Set

There was more to the Brannan federal farm program than had met the eye. According to seasoned Washington observers, the plan would serve as a bait for the farm vote in the congressional races next year.

For instance, if administration leaders could extend wartime price support for another year, it would give voters a chance to pass on the controversial Brannan plan. Thus the plan could be dangled as a major issue when Democrats and Republicans began struggling for the important farm vote.

AT a midwestern Democratic conference, both Brannan, secretary of agriculture, and J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the national Democratic committee, made a plea for extension of the price support program as they began to plan for next year's tug-of-war with the GOP.

McGrath, making it plain that the Brannan plan has Mr. Truman's endorsement, said continuation of the present relatively high-price support program was to be preferred to the Aiken long-range farm law passed by the 80th Republican congress. Unless congress acts, McGrath pointed out, the Aiken law will go into effect next year.

The Brannan plan is designed to support farm income at a "prosperity" level, but at the same time to provide consumers with lower prices for perishable foods—especially meat, dairy and poultry products—when there are surpluses. It would use government payments to assure desired farm cash returns.

PRESENT laws direct the government to support prices of major products at not less than 90 per cent of parity.

CONJURER:

Name, Smile

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., who inherited a name and a smile to conjure with and wasted little time in conjuring with them, has been duly sworn in as a member of the house of representatives.

The 34-year-old congressman from New York's 20th district, filling the seat left vacant by the death of Sol Bloom, ran as a candidate of the Four Freedoms and Liberal parties, although he will operate as a working Democrat in the legislative arena.

ROOSEVELT failed to get the regular Democratic nomination during the campaign so he ran on the Four Freedoms ticket. In so doing he scored a popular upset over the regular (Tammany) Democrat, a Republican and an American Labor candidate.

The third son of the late President took the oath from Acting Speaker John W. McCormack (D., Mass.), while his mother beamed happily from the gallery.

During his first day on the job Roosevelt:

CHATTED briefly with President Truman; denied a rumor that he might run for mayor of New York; allowed that he hoped congress would repeal the Taft-Hartley labor law, enact Mr. Truman's civil rights program and put through a national housing act.

It all looked like a reasonable beginning for another Roosevelt political career.

HOUSING:

Action Seen

Indications were that despite opposition from many quarters, the administration's big new housing bill would get out of committee and go to the house floor for action.

THE RULES committee, which twice last year killed similar legislation, had refused to clear the current bill. But Rep. A. J. Sabath (D., Ill.) was predicting the committee would act to clear the measure.

Sabath was on fairly safe ground, for under the new house "anti-bottleneck" procedure adopted in January, the multibillion - dollar housing bill could be put to a house vote over the rules committee's objections.

THE housing program, one of President Truman's major campaign promises, was approved by the senate April 21 on a 57 to 13 vote. It then bogged down in the house.

The bill calls for a vast program of slum clearance, low-rent housing and farm housing aids.

Bares Mission

Ex-Communist Editor Louis Budenz is shown as he told a senate committee that Gerhardt Eisler, who fled the U.S. as a stowaway, was ordered to Europe by Moscow to train "new espionage agents" for use in the United States. Budenz testified in connection with the committee's probe of subversive activities by aliens.

DEPRESSING:

'Right Now'

"I regret," the senator from Maine said, "that we are now in a state of depression. It is not a thing of the future. It is right now."

After thus evoking the spirit of the 1930's, Sen. Owen Brewster announced blandly that senate Republicans shortly would sponsor a 50-million-dollar public-works and relief-planning program "to meet the growing Democratic depression."

THE BILL to be projected along these lines would not in itself provide funds for public works, but merely would finance the planning of a "shelf" of such works to be started when deemed advisable.

Sen. Robert Taft (R., Ohio), who also is in on the deal, said that what he had in mind was a bill that would establish the framework for federal grants to states if their relief cases should reach a certain percentage of their total population.

Said Taft: "What we Republicans want to avoid is the creation of another WPA like Harry Hopkins ran."

Without trying to guess how much relief spending might be necessary under such a plan, Senator Brewster opined that would "depend upon just how bad this Democratic depression gets."

Whether this "relief bill" proposal is sincere or whether it is a cynical attempt to discredit the administration in the face of the coming 1950 elections, only time would tell.

TRUMAN:

Drops Curb Bill

There was one thing about President Truman—he was beginning to develop the ability to recognize a hint when he saw it. There have been times when the President seemed to suffer from an ability to do that, but now it's different.

The President, obviously with an understanding ear to the ground, has decided he won't press congress to give him standby war powers.

THAT'S not only wise of the President, it's good strategy, particularly since it would have been impossible for the administration to convince the 81st congress that any such powers are needed.

However, there was an official reason advanced for the change in objectives. One authority described the revision of plan as a "quiet demilitarization" of the national security resources board on White House orders. In other words, the emphasis would be away from keeping the people agitated and alerted for possible future war.

THE war powers bill would have provided a detailed mobilization act covering priority and seizure powers, controls over prices, manpower; production and transportation. It would, if enacted, go into effect automatically on the declaration of war emergency by congress.

Mr. Truman was said to have decided it would be inappropriate to try to get such a law passed in peacetime.

SCHOOL AID BILL OPPOSED

Eisenhower Warns of Too Much Government

Dwight D. Eisenhower, speaking not as a military leader but as a college president, again saw fit to warn the nation against letting the federal government get too strong. It was the second time the supreme commander of Allied forces in World War II had issued that warning.

Declaring that he is opposed to legislation which would make federal money available to help public schools in all states, he said such a practice would stimulate a competition among states and localities for greater shares of government money.

He conceded some areas have such meager tax resources that they need air, and that he would favor aid to such areas; but without abuse or direct interference.

Smile Awhile

Fifteen-year-old Viola had reached the crossroads of life but for her it was positively the end, but really. Her father went up to her room when he heard a lot of sobbing after she had returned from a dance.

"Why, Viola, darling, what happened?" he asked gently.

"Oh, Denny and I had a fight," she explained. "Now I just know I'll never get married. It seems I'm not old enough for the young men and not young enough for the old men."

Number one boy—"My grandfather lived to be 98 years old."

Number two boy—"Gee, that's old all right. What finally got him?"

Number one boy—"Plot number 6, section 13 of Evergreen Cemetery."

Son—"Well, dad, you've managed to live to a ripe old age. How did you manage to keep the germs of disease away from you all these many years?"

Father—"I'll let you in on a little secret, son. I attribute my longevity to the persistent use of garlic. Now don't breathe that to a soul."

Son—"The secret or the garlic?"

Once there was a very rich old bachelor whose sole recreation seemed to be in leading the girls a merry chase. One young girl was a little doubtful about the advisability of chasing a man so old.

"Don't you think he is a little too old to be considered eligible?" she asked her aunt.

"My dear," she replied with a wisdom born of years of experience, "he is a little too eligible to be considered old."

Philanthropic U.S. Gave 3.25 Billions Last Year

The people of the United States gave away 3.25 billion dollars in 1948, according to estimates reported in the 1949 Britannica Book of the Year.

The 1948 donations exceeded by 72 million dollars the philanthropies of 1947, the Book of the Year reports. This upward trend appears to have resulted from an unusual number of large gifts and bequests, an increase in corporation giving, and greater numbers of small gifts by persons who had established new giving habits during the war years.

In a summary of 326 fund raising campaigns, the extent of the support of varying causes is shown in the Book of the Year. Largest beneficiary of donations was foreign relief, with organized social work a close second. Hospitals and health organizations got the third greatest amount, education was fourth, and religious causes were fifth, with less than a third of the amount going to education.

Fine arts and play and recreation also had a share, although a much smaller one.

The Book of the Year adds: "That large gifts were yet an important factor in philanthropy was indicated by the fact that during the last six months of 1948 there were public announcements of 165 gifts and bequests in excess of $100,000 each.

"The trend in mass giving was perhaps best indicated by a November report of 227 community chests which showed that the amount raised by these chests in 1948 was 105.5% of the amount raised in 1947."

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Now I'm Going Back To High School!

When I saw lights burning in the High School auditorium last night, I looked in to see what went on. About twenty people were listening to Buzz Ellis, the electrician, talk about television.

I slipped into a back seat and asked Hap Thomas what was up. Hap told me it was the new Self-Improvement Club. I stayed to listen—and learned a lot. Buzz really knows his stuff.

Turns out this club meets every Friday night. Each member gives a talk on the subject he knows most about. I joined on the spot because learning new things is one of my favorite hobbies.

From where I sit, it's willingness to learn from the other person that makes Americans tolerant towards so many different viewpoints and tastes in things. Just because Buzz Ellis goes for chocolate malteds, while I prefer a mellow glass of beer, doesn't mean I'm right and he's wrong. Incidentally, next week I'm going to talk on how to run a newspaper.

43rd Annual Marshall Co. Fair

With the Minnesota Territorial Centennial as its central theme, the stage is all set for the 43rd Annual Marshall County Fair at Warren on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 14, 15 and 16.

Marshall county's own produced Centennial Pageant, "A Century of Wagon Wheels", written and directed by Mrs. A. A. Trost of Warren and embracing a cast of approximately 500 residents from practically every community in the county, will open the Fair on Thursday afternoon at two o'clock. This pageant will depict important incidents in the development of Minnesota and Marshall county. The day has been designated Pioneer Day, and special recognition will be paid to the county's pioneers during the programs.

Friday afternoon at the Fair has been designated as Horse Race Day, with seven heats of fast running races on the card. A purse of $400 has been put up for the runners. Entries are coming from a wide area in the valley as well as several horses from Canada to compete in the widely heralded International Race.

Ford Model T Championship races, with a program of five special racing events will feature the Saturday afternoon program. At least a dozen Model T Fords have been entered in the race to compete for a purse of $475. The Model Ts have been stripped down into racing car style and with the Marshall county track in excellent condition, some new Model T speed records can be expected this year.

The night grandstand show will bring the Gertrude and Randolph Avery produced big fair circuit revue "Manhatten Frolics" to the County Fair at Warren. These producers are known to be among the best in show business and promise a production even superior to the outstanding production given at Warren a year ago. Ten big circus and vaudeville acts will also be on the program afternoon and evening.

The educational features of the fair will also show great improvement with many exhibitors already reserving space for the showing of livestock. More than 500 Marshall County 4 H club members will exhibit their projects at the fair and will compete for trips to the State Fair later on this summer. The 4 H department will also have at least a dozen colorful booths in their building on the grounds. Rural Schools of the county will also have special booths in their building commemorating the Centennial year. Farm machinery displays will be larger than ever, while the home appliance and industrial show promises to be far superior to any in recent years.

Many improvements have been made at the fairgrounds including the installation of modern rest rooms for the comfort of fair patrons. Additional land has been purchased which will provide better parking facilities as well as better ground for the County Fair Midway.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Wants Welfare Department; Veterans Will Get NSLI Dividends; Big Four Agree on Austrian Pact

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

ROOSEVELT CHATS WITH TRUMAN . . . Another Roosevelt, Franklin D. Jr., chats in the White House with President Truman. The meeting occurred shortly after young Roosevelt was sworn in as congressman from the 20th New York district, replacing the late Sol Bloom. F. D. R. Jr., made it plain he is a Democrat and a member of Mr. Truman's "team."

WELFARE:
More for Less

Signing into law a bill to reorganize the federal government, President Truman offered a major proposal. He wants a new department of welfare created with its chief officer given full cabinet rank.

THE IDEA is not a completely new one. It was heard frequently during the early days of the Rooseveltian era, much oftener during the latter years of F. D. R's regime.

While this proposition commanded chief attention of the nation's press, the President offered six other streamlining plans aimed at giving the taxpayers better service for less money.

These included:

Transfer of the U.S. employment and unemployment compensation offices to the labor department.

PLACING of the two key defense agencies — national security council and national security and resources board—directly in the President's office.

Tightening up administration of the post office department, maritime commission and civil service commission.

Transfer of the public roads administration to the commerce department.

The President said the plans, which followed closely several major recommendations of the Hoover commission on government reorganization, will not "automatically" produce efficiency and cut spending.

BUT HE SAID they open the door to improvements that will make the government "more vigorous" and operate more smoothly at a lower cost "over a period of time."

No one expected any reduction in federal spending, and the President's conclusions might be construed as a preliminary defense setup for continued federal outlay at the present, or an increased level, despite the Hoover commission recommendations and the President's own seven-point manifesto.

VETERANS:
Get Good News

Veterans of World War II were all set for a surprise bonanza.

The Veterans' administration announced in Washington that cash refunds totaling 2.8 billion dollars will begin for them about next January—that is, for all GI's who took out national service life insurance during the war. These were estimated to number some 16 million.

Under the new payments, announced by the VA, each ex-serviceman or his heirs would receive an average of $175 from life insurance dividends. Described as a "dividend" the money is to be repaid from two sources:

1. An eight billion dollar surplus which developed from the fact that G.I. insurance premiums were based by law on a standard mortality (death) rate table which turned out to be higher than needed.

2. Earnings from the surplus.

In genreal, it was explained, every veteran who took out national service insurance and kept it in force at least three months will be eligible—provided the policies were not issued after January 1, 1948. No refunds are to be made on policies issued after that date.

MEANWHILE, government officials saw in the insurance dividend payments a timely "shot in the arm" for business in 1950 which should serve to stimulate sales. They recalled that the terminal-leave payoff of some two billion dollars in 1947 provided a sizeable such stimilus for the nation's business.

The plan to start the checks rolling in January brought vigorous criticism on Capitol Hill as Representative Keating (R., N. Y.) demanded that congress set October 15 as the deadline. He introduced a bill to hurry the dividend payments to that date. He declared that the government had "overcharged" veterans on their life insurance, and that the money should be refunded "immediately, not a year from now."

White House Repairs Still a Question

It appeared that all the commotion about repairs to the White House wasn't quite over, although congress approved and sent to the President a money bill carrying funds for work on the White House. The money was included in a measure calling for expenditure of 671 million dollars for various government obligations.

THE HOUSE, which had passed the bill earlier, accepted a one-word amendment approved by the senate. The change would put it up to a special six-man commission whether a separate residence should be built for the first family, in addition to the job on the White House itself.

GERMANY:
Partial Accord

The four-week conference of the council of foreign ministers of the four major powers had ended with partial accord having been reached. The western powers and Russia cleared away obstacles to an Austrian independence treaty and agreed to try to get along a little better in Germany.

THE RUSSIANS, however, were in there pitching right up to the final moments of the parley. The conference ended in a flurry of excitement as Russia sought unsuccessfully to make a last minute change in the anouncement of the meeting's results.

The Reds had promised not to reimpose a blockade on Berlin in return for efforts to revive east-west trade in Germany. This was contained in a six-point statement of principle by the Big Four to guide negotiations in Germany.

The Russians were suported in their 150 million dollar claim on Austria for German assets, and swung an uppercut at Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito by dropping their support of Yugoslavian claims on Austria. These were the points which cleared the way for an Austrian treaty which has been ordered for presentation by September 1.

DESPITE the improvement in east-west relations growing out of the conference, American spokesmen were not optimistic in evaluating results. U.S. Secretary of State Dean Acheson had no immediate comment.

Work on the Austrian treaty, however, was termed a "substantial stey" forward and of no little importance because it would free Austria and push Soviet troops farther back into eastern Europe.

It was felt that ground had been neither gained nor lost in Germany.

'UNIVERSAL MAN':
Johann von Goethe

From every state in the union and from many foreign lands, distinguished visitors are pouring into the historic little frontier town of Aspen, Colo., to pay honor to a man born 200 years ago.

The Goethe Bicentennial Convocation and Music Festival (June 27-July 16) is presenting an imposing roster of thinkers, writers, statesmen, philosophers, educators—and musicians who will seek to reexamine and re-interpret the works and philosophy of Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, the Universal Man, as it pertains to the atomic age.

HEADING the impressive list of lecturers is Albert Schweitzer, of French Equitorial Africa—philosopher, doctor, musician, theologian — acknowledged throughout the civilized world as the foremost modern disciple of Goethe.

The music festival, running in conjunction with the convocation, will feature compositions based on Goethe's works, monumental music of equal stature to Goethe, and music contemporary to him and known to have been inspirational to him.

LABOR:
Bad Timing?

Was the postwar buggy ride of consumer demand and increasingly higher wages really over?

The Ford motor company thought so and said so.

CONFRONTED with a list of demands by the united automobile workers union, the company made a significant counter-proposal.

Instead of pay raises and pension, health and welfare plans as drafted by the union, the company proposed to peg wages where they are for another 18 months.

Such action, said the company, would "set a stabilization pattern for the entire (national) economy at this critical time."

THE UNION, among other things, has demanded that wages be pegged to the cost of living.

Pointing out that the cost of living is down and that the market for cars might drop up to 32 per cent after this year, the company declared flatly that it would reject any change in the work contract which would mean higher labor costs—whether in the form of wage increases or pension or welfare funds.

THUS the issue was hastening to a showdown. Could industry stand firm against another round of wage increases, or would labor with its organized power so stifle industry that capitulation would be inevitable?

Indicted

There was much of mystery and charge and counter-charge in the events out of which grew the federal indictment of Preston Tucker (above). Tucker and five others were indicted by the government on charges of mail fraud, conspiracy in violations of the Securities and exchange act. Tucker has retaliated with charges that the securities and exchange commission has made it impossible to continue production of the Tucker car, which was to be powered with a motor in the rear.

RED HUNT:
Harvard Cool

Harvard, the nation's oldest university, was having nothing to do with any Communist-hunting.

There was a reason, officials said. They felt that to do so might be a danger to the university's freedom and to its academic integrity.

AND, Harvard held, American freedom is the school's "true glory," as it once told a man who tried to "buy" it for 10 million dollars.

The Harvard policy statement in connection with Communist-hunting activities was put this way:

"There will be no harassment of professors for engaging in open and legal meetings. There will be no apparatus of inquiry and 'closer watch.'

"The harm done by the effort necessary to discover even a single clandestine party (Communist) member would outweigh any possible benefit."

PROMISES:
Made for Housing

House Republicans indicated they were tired of the federal housing wrangle. So, they promised, they'd introduce a housing bill to substitute for the administration's program.

It was said to include a plan for privately-owned homes and some low-rent property. In fact, the substitute measure would embody most of the administration's slum-clearance ideas.

LONG SEARCH SEEN ENDED

Chlorophyll in Toothpaste Fights Decay

A new toothpaste containing chlorophyll may be the answer to the long-time search for a preventive for tooth decay. Use of chlorophyll in the new product was announced by Dr. Gustav W. Rapp, professor and research biochemist of Loyola university's dental school, and his assistant, B. F. Gurney.

The new paste acts to do away with all of the conditions generally thought by dental authorities to be causes of dental decay, according to Dr. Rapp and Mr. Gurney, and owes its unusual powers to the use of the water-soluble derivaties of chlorophyll, which is the magic green substance that gives grass and all other green plants their color. Long known as essential to all life, chlorophyll previously has been used with excellent results.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Tired of working as a clerk in a hardware store for 20 years, Andy Ives suggests to his wife, Kate, that they move to a grant of free land in the flat, black cotton country of southern Arkansas which is parceled out to those who pay a small fee and agree to live on the land for two years, making certain improvements. Andy's family, consisting of his son, Dave, daughter, Hope, and mother-in-law, Granny, heartily approves of the idea of modern pioneering. Hope rejects a proposal of marriage by Wall Harbison, son of a wealthy banker, and looks forward instead to her life as a "modern Priscilla," looking in the wilderness for her "John Alden."

CHAPTER III

It was the cutting loose from what had been home for so many years. That was it, she told herself. The big truckload of household things was a jumbled symbol of the home she and Andy had made.

She didn't realize that Andy was beside her until his big hand caught hers and he said: "Stop it, Kate! I feel kind of bad too. It's still the right thing we're doing. Don't cry."

"I'm not," she said, still swallowing hard against the lump.

Granny turned back into the house. "I'll check each room," she said briskly, "and see that nothing has been left." The rooms had already been checked by every member of the family.

"I'll help you," Hope offered quickly, following her in.

Dave went to the old car and raised the hood, occupied himself thereunder.

It was a time for Andy and Kate to be alone, and the others knew it. But now that they were alone, there seemed nothing to say. They just stood there, Andy holding her hand, and watched the truck make its way to the street and turn south. It disappeared around the corner.

Granny's and Hope's footsteps rang hollowly in the rooms and hallway as they returned to the front door. Hope's eyes were suspiciously red.

"We'll go over to Sue Tatum's now," Granny said, taking charge of things. "It's cold in the house; the front door has been open all this time."

At one thirty of that day they were at Whisper, a village less than fifty miles from Newcastle. From there on, it was low country, and they were beginning to see gaunt, brown cypresses hung with gray moss. The streams were flat-banked, sluggish.

"Does it get worse than this near our place?" Kate asked after a while.

"No worse," Andy told her. "And not better, either. It's swamp land where we're going."

"How on earth will you and Dave ever clear enough ground to make a crop on?" she asked worriedly.

"We'll have axes and mattocks and a crosscut saw. We'll cut and dig and burn. We'll get ground cleared. Don't bother about that."

They caught the truck a bare five miles this side of Newcastle, an old county seat town where class cleavages were sharp, where opinions were as deep-seated as the belief that the old land-owning group should have the authority over all others; where what one did was less important than one's background and connections; where one's intelligence might be a less effective recommendation than the names graven on the older tombstones of the Shady Rest Cemetery just east of town.

The Family Leaves For 'Ives' Acres'

They followed the truck down the main business "drag": old brick stores with show windows that were changed monthly by the more progressive merchants; the Randall Drug Store, Est. 1896; the Westover Hotel, with a dingy chicken yard behind it; a filling station in the niche beyond Pete's Sandwich Place, Ladies and Gents Welcome (getting cheaper along here, approaching the railroad); then, in the big lot just this side of the railroad, the Newcastle Gin Co., where wagons of cotton were lined up for the swinging suction pipe.

"I don't like Newcastle," Hope said as they crossed the tracks. "Look how ugly it is over here!"

"They put their best street forward!" Granny told her. "What a difference between this and the one we came in on!"

The street they were crossing now paralleled the railroad—a dismal stretch of little grocery stores, taverns, pressing shops, cafes, filling stations and dry-goods stores.

They were going out of town now, passing between two rows of close-packed shacks occupied by Negroes.

"Look at that sign!" Dave exclaimed. "It says the 'Green Light Dance Hall,' but look how run-down it is!"

"That's for colored people," Granny told him. "They've got a way of being happy no matter what their surroundings look like. It's in them to be happy for something inside them, not because of something that's outside of them."

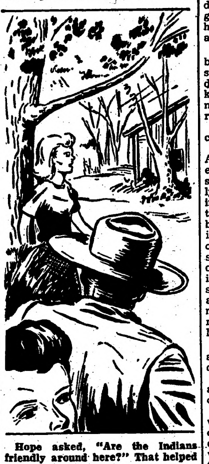
"We could do with a little of that," Andy philosophized. "And it's going to take a lot of something inside us to keep us happy down here. There'll be times when our surroundings may get us down if we aren't careful."

"I'd ask you what you mean," Kate said dryly, "if I didn't already know."

They were quickly out of town, for it ended abruptly at the bayou woods not far beyond O'Grady's Filling Station and Garage. They were driving between two great stretches of cotton fields, both still white with the unpicked crop. All were quiet now, like people at a play, waiting for the curtain to rise. It was not far to the place where they would stop and unload the truck and begin a new life, and each of them was intently studying the countryside.

Andy passed the truck and drew away from it, staying a quarter of a mile ahead. "We turn off not far from here," he said. "The car will have to lead the way. The road's kind of winding out through the woods."

This was rank understatement. After they had turned off the highway, the road was not only tortuous but rough and poorly bridged. That is to say, the better part of it was, for they did have gravel for a mile and a half after leaving the concrete. When they turned right, off the gravel, they followed a woods road that was dim in places, low-hung with great branches that had to be raised by one of the colored boys while the other drove the truck beneath them.



Hope asked, "Are the Indians friendly around here?" That helped a little.

Emerson Eliot Welcomes the Ives

The land was flat, except for shallow depressions that had been sloughs, the bottoms of which were thick-veined with cracks and curly with flakes of fresh deposit that had cupped as it dried in the hot fall sun. Here and there a dim road led off into the tangled woods. "They go to the places of our neighbors," Andy said. "There are the beginnings of farms scattered through there."

Finally they reached a rough bridge across a low stream. There were no railings on the bridge, and the heavy planks groaned and popped loosely as the truck eased over them. It was Lost Bayou, so Andy said.

Kate was pale now, her heart pounding. She hadn't dreamed that it would be this much of a wilderness! Hope's eyes were wide, and her lips were parted and dry. Dave looked puzzled. Granny sat very straight, ready for anything.

They eased around a curve where the road was so narrow that berry vines and thorn-tree limbs made scratchy sounds on the sides of the car.

"Yonder it is!" Andy announced. "See our house?"

They looked and saw a leaning shack on a slight rise. Huge oaks and pecans towered above it. Saplings and briars grew at each end. A sad-looking stick-and-mud chimney stuck up from the west end. Its top, which had once been square, was now crumbled and broken and ragged. Through the roof near the east end of the structure, a rusty joint of stovepipe reached up leaning northward, either in mute testimony to the south wind's strength or in a desperate effort to point the direction in which civilization lay.

"The land we've taken up lies south of the house, mostly," Andy told them. "The timber's not as big down that way."

Kate wanted to say something bright and encouraging, for she knew how eager Andy was for them to like it; but for the life of her she could think of nothing that would sound just right. There was a heavy, cold feeling deep inside her.

Hope asked, "Are the Indians friendly around here?" That helped a little.

Granny said, "I think it's lovely!"

Andy backed around between two big pecan trees, out of the way of the truck, and they piled out. The women started for the shack; Andy and Dave waited for the truck to complete its cautious backing as the driver lined the rear end of it up with the small entrance of the cabin.

Finally, the back end of the truck was in position, about six feet from the door. The driver cut the motor, and they began unloading.

Kate was positive that the house wouldn't hold their things, but Granny had a solution. "Pile what you don't need right away in the shed room back of the kitchen; then keep bringing things in until the truck's empty. That's the way you do it."

This was logic, but it was also a threat to the old law of physics which says that complications will develop if two objects try to occupy the same space at the same time.

A rifle cracked sharply in the distance, just as Dave was carefully setting a box of dishes inside the door. He straightened up quickly, grinned at his father. "Squirrel hunter!" he said. "Say, I bet there are gangs of squirrels out here!"

"And at least one more human being somewhere around!" Hope said, low, to her mother, for she didn't want her father to hear. She knew how he would feel if they said much about the dismal, remote surroundings.

"I hear a car," Granny said. "It's coming this way."

They listened. It was a motor. Accompanying sounds in the general noise hinted a serious inner struggle: The cylinders were clearly on very bad terms, each performing at will and without regard for the other three; connecting rods banged out a constant threat of disintegration; there was a steady clanging, as if the fan might be slapping the radiator with each revolution; a series of sharp backfirings machine-gunned the swamp's stillness, then subsided; and beneath and all around these more stalwart noises there was an obbligato of rattlings and janglings that grew louder as the car approached.

"What if it blows up?" Hope asked. "Hadn't we better watch out for falling metal? Jalopy flak?"

The crack of the rifle sounded again, barely audible above the cacophony of the automobile.

They were sliding the piano toward the end of the truck when the car came into view, appearing out of what seemed to be the woods, with no road to guide it, nosing through brush and switch cane, barely dodging a tree here, a fallen log there. It was a dented, scarred, ancient roadster, once powder blue, the bumper flopping up and down, the right-hand door swinging open and shut as the body swayed. The headlight lenses were gone; steam spurled from the capless radiator; the hood was loose on the left side; the windshield was cracked and taped. There was no top. The roundish, bespectacled face of an elderly man peered around the windshield. It was an owlishly serious face. The man wore a corduroy cap, ear flaps down. He swung the car sharply, just missing a large pecan tree, grazed the bumper of the truck, and came to an abrupt stop by the simple expedient of heading into a hickory sapling. The motor backfired deafeningly as he cut the switch, ran a lick or two as if reluctant to be still, then coughed in sad farewell and was silent.

"Our first guest!" Hope whispered to Granny. "Shall I show him to the blue room?"

The man slid out of the Model A. He was short and slightly on the wiry side, baggily dressed in khaki coat and thick, tough, gray trousers that were generously streaked with dried mud and splotched with reddish-brown stains such as blood leaves. His head was very large for his body; his eyes were bird-bright behind tortoise-shell glasses. His face bore the stamp of good nature, and his ruddy cheeks were lightly seamed as if by laughter.

He came around the truck. "Hello, Mr. Ives," he greeted Andy. "I am Mr. Eliot—Emerson Eliot. Welcome to our fair wilderness!"

Andy Finds That News Travels Fast

Andy shook hands with him. "I'm Andy Iv— But you know my name already!" he exclaimed. "How'd you know it?"

Mr. Eliot chuckled pleasantly. "Oh, news gets around in these parts." He glanced toward the door, where the three women were gathered, and removed his cap, revealing a bald scalp with a scholarly fringe of graying brown hair. He bowed. "We are delighted to have such a charming family as our neighbors."

"Thank you," said Kate, meeting his dignity. "I'm Mrs. Ives, and this is Hope, our daughter, and my mother, Mrs. Craig."

"And I'm Dave."

"Hello, Dave," said Mr. Eliot. "And now we are all acquainted—"

But the crack of the rifle came again, stopping him. "Mr. Flipp," he said, "is getting you some squirrels for supper."

"Well, that's certainly nice!" Andy said, glancing at Kate. "I've told my wife how neighborly the people down here would be."

JUST JESTING

Hubbie—"You look tired, dear. Why don't you go to the mountains for a nice rest?"

Wifie—"Oh, I don't know. I don't think the mountain air would agree with me."

Hubbie—"Well, it would be the first thing that didn't."

Teacher—"So you want to be older so that you can do many things that your brothers and sisters do, eh?"

Small boy—"Yes, maam."

Teacher—"Well, who is the oldest in your family?"

Small boy—"Daddy is, but he got a head start."

"You should be ashamed of yourself," reprimanded the father as he gave his son a dressing down for not having advanced beyond the errand-boy stage at his place of business. "Why, when George Washington was your age he was hard at work as a surveyor, earning good money."

"Sure," replied the youth in a swift counter-attack, "and, when he was your age he was President of the United States."

"I don't agree with your theory of prenatal influence," said the young lady as she sipped her tea. "Take my case for example," she said. "My mother was accidentally hit with a phonograph record just before I was born, but it has not done me any harm, any harm, any harm."

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

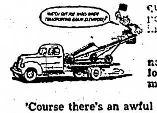
Seems like everybody's goin' some place these days. When I'm whizzin' along over the Otter Tail transmission lines, all I see is cars, cars and more cars. People goin' on vacations, I guess. Vacations are nice. They're also as dangerous as grabbin' onto a 41,600 volt live-wire—if you get careless with your driving, try to pass on a hill, or go in swimmin' right after eatin'. You be Careful . . . and I'll be Reddy.

Speakin' of vacations, I suppose these guys get 'em, but I don't know how or when. I'm talking about Charlie Sachs, the Otter Tail Power Company chief dispatcher, and his assistants, Phil Van Buren, Jerry Frick, Bill Brophy, and Charlie Hall, out at Hoot Lake near Fergus Falls.

Those boys control the "heart" of the whole Otter Tail system—and are they kept busy! They work in a big room with telephones all over the place. Right in front of them is a great big Control Board, about 20 feet long and 8 feet high, which shows the whole system—even transformers and pole-top switches!

Among the five of them, these boys have a total of 44 years of dispatching experience—and they like nothing better than to "dispatch" me all over the place! Just in maintaining an even load of juice all over the system, they make about 240 phone calls in a 24 hour period!

And when trouble develops, when a sleet storm knocks out lines or a wind storm tears 'em down, things really begin to happen . . . fast. Phone calls . . . either over regular long distance lines or over Otter Tail's high frequency carrier system on its own power lines . . . sky-rocket up to 500 in a 24 hour period!



In fact, during an electrical storm not long ago, Charlie Sachs made 76 long distance calls by himself from midnight until 8 o'clock in the morning.

'Course there's an awful lot of things that can cause an awful lot of trouble. For instance, at this time of the year a lot of folks are moving portable farm equipment along country roads and highways. Such things as portable grain elevators, front-end loaders on tractors, etc.

It's pretty dangerous if these things snag a power-line. Even if the line isn't knocked out of commission, the fellow that's driving the equipment is liable to get knocked right out of his seat—or even worse.

Take it from a guy that's on the "inside"—takin' a chance with a live-wire is as bad as takin' a chance jumpin' from an airplane with no parachute.

Notice To The Public

Due to the continued occurance of uncontrolled fires in recent years it is necessary to call to the attention of the general public that there are State laws, the violation of which are punishable by fine and jail sentence, governing the setting, and reporting of fires in this vicinity.

Any person or persons who set a fire other than for domestic purposes whether on their own land or not, must first obtain a burning permit from their local township firewarden or forest officer, unless the place where the fire is set is entirely surrounded by a freshly made or plowed fire guard down to mineral soil and of sufficient width to keep the fire from spreading from said area. Upon application by any individual, a burning permit may be issued by the discretion of the township warden if he deems that there is proper protection. In the extreme dry seasons all permits are regulated or stopped by the order of the Forest Supervisor, regardless. However, an individual who does let a fire escape even though he has a burning permit, is not only liable for violation, but for property damage as well.

Any individual who fails to report promptly to the closest forest ranger or township fire warden, the presence of a fire on any lands he occupies, whether owned by him or not, and whether set by him or not, is subject to prosecution if such unreported fire spreads from said premises to the damage, loss or injury of the state or any such person.

Any able bodied individual who refuses to aid in control or suppression of a fire, when requested to do so by an authorized employee of the State can be held for violation of existing State Laws.

Fires should be reported to the closest State Ranger, Patrolman or warden. Robley Hunt may be contacted for the area of Mud Lake Refuge, and townships of East Valley, Grand Plain and Eckvoll.

It is recognized that any individual has the right and privilege to accomplish burning on his own lands, in accordance with State fire laws.

Any such individual, however, must also recognize his responsibility in such burning - that adjacent land owners may object to the spread of fire to his lands, that the individual burning may cause fire to spread and destroy valuable property, woodlands, fencing, etc., unless proper precautions are taken to prevent uncontrolled fire.

Individuals engaging in burning should also recognize the great harm done by burning of wildlife habitat, in these days when wildlife species are annually finding food and cover becoming more scarce, and hunting grounds are becoming just as scarce for the "one gallus" hunter.

It is hoped that co-operation and respect of the state fire laws can be solicited from the general public. This is far more desirable to all concerned, than necessity of apprehending individuals who fail to recognize responsibility to others.

Each township has the privilege of recommending a township fire warden to issue burning permits or otherwise cooperate with our department. The fact that the township neglects to recommend a man as township fire warden, does not in any way relieve any individual from getting a burning permit or to other wise cooperate with the Division of Forestry as prescribed by law.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Asks 45 Millions to Spread U.S. 'Know-How' Throughout World; A-Bomb Urged as Defense Weapon

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

U.S. KNOW-HOW:

Share for World

Back in January, President Harry Truman delivered in his message to congress, a multiple-point program. In that program was mentioned "point four" — one of the proposals he made and one which raised some eyebrows and set off no end of speculation on "when and how."

"POINT FOUR" was a proposal to share United States "know-how" in varied fields with other friendly nations of the world. In that proposal, the President asked congress to go along with a plan to let such nations in on how the U.S. does things economically, mechanically, industrially.

After speculation died down there was nothing more said about "point four" until recently. Then, President Truman told congress exactly what he wanted. First, he asked for 45 million dollars to help the backward countries of the world through U.S. aid.

CALLING that a first step, he listed some other factors also as "preliminaries." These included:

Technical assistance to be provided through the United Nations or directly by the United States.

Private investment to turn undeveloped areas into producing for the world economy.

Authority delegated by the congress to the President to give him power to administer the program and authority to delegate it to the secretary of state and to other government officers as he deems appropriate.

"We are here embarking on a venture that extends far into the future," he told congress. He added that "grinding poverty and the lack of opportunity for many millions of people in . . . certain regions . . . constitute the greatest challenge of the world today."

A-BOMB USE:

Limits Asked

How would idealism fare against expediency in the matter of atomic bomb use in a war crisis?

That was a question with which congress was being asked to deal. Senator Flanders (R., Vt.) asked congress to declare the atomic bomb as a weapon of defense only for the free nations—not to be used unless an aggressor hurls it first.

TO RISK a masterpiece of understatement, that could be a most dangerous policy as even a child could see. Give an aggressor first shot at us with the bomb before we retaliate? Some critics of such a plan might reasonably demand: How silly can you get?

An enemy equipped with enough bombs, and permitted first drop, could put this nation, or any nation, in such a fix that there'd be no use and no opportunity to retaliate with the bomb.

From here it looks as though Senator Flanders may have nothing but his trouble for his work.

FLANDERS explained his plan as one which he believed might speed the United Nations' efforts to write an agreement on world-wide control of atomic energy.

Asked whether his plan might not arouse criticism that this country is denying itself its foremost weapon, the senator replied, "I don't think we should sell our immortal souls to the devil."

But in the American concept, stemming from 1776, to sell one's freedom to an enemy through nonuse of the bomb might be tantamount to the situation which the senator finds distasteful.

ECONOMY:

Warning Sounded

President Truman's administration was coming in for some criticism as a result of the current bipartisan economy drive in congress. Senator Aitken (R., Vt.) warned that if the drive succeeds, it will put a powerful political weapon in President Truman's hands —and in an election year, at that.

Aitken argued that it would be tantamount to handing the President a two-billion-dollar campaign fund for the congressional elections next year.

FIFTY-SIX senators — 21 Democrats and 35 Republicans — have signed a petition to take up a resolution which would force Truman to balance the budget by cutting federal operating appropriations from five to 10 per cent in the fiscal year.

Top Teacher

Sarah Churchill, left, daughter of England's Winston Churchill, had the best possible coaching for her stage role in "The Philadelphia Story." Her tutor, at right, was Tallulah Bankhead, famed stage and screen actress.

TRADE PACT:

Britons Jump Gun

In matters affecting its own welfare, Great Britain never has taken any but the realistic view, hence the signing of a five-year trade pact with Argentina — a pact to which the United States has vigorously objected.

THE PACT, calling for exchanges totaling 500 million dollars the first year, and looking to at least an equal volume the other years, commits the two nations to virtual barter.

The U.S. objected to the pact on the grounds that it violates the spirit of free competitive international trade.

Argentine President Juan Peron rapped outside criticism in a speech at ceremonies marking the end of negotiations which lasted more than five months.

"It is not possible," he said, "to hide the evil intentions and evil designs behind this criticism. This type of economic warfare is a sign of incapacity."

OPEN criticism of British action came from Senator Wherry (R., Neb.) who accused Britain of "selfishly promoting her own economic interests at the expense of the U.S. and European countries." He contended that the pact "defeats the very purpose of recovery and free exchange of goods in the world."

Paul G. Hoffman, U.S. economic cooperation administrator, also was concerned. He said he was strongly opposed to this type of "bilateral agreement" and that he would use every influence to discourage such two-way pacts.

LANDLORDS:

'Freeze' Is Out

Landlords would breathe with some relief as they read the latest announcement by federal housing expediter Tighe Woods.

Woods said "the freeze principle of rent control is now a thing of the past."

FOUR new rules easing rent controls would indicate that was the situation, but a closer look might raise some doubts.

First, owners putting more value into their property would be in line to collect increased rents. Then, local rent officials would have more leeway in adjusting rent ceilings in harmony with local real estate principles. Third would be the elimination of the "freeze" principle, and, fourth, making an "opinion" as to probable rent hike limits available to landlords before they actually repair or improve their property.

BUT—and there were three of these—the tenants still have protection. The proposed repairs or improvements can only be made with the tenant's permission, however, with these conditions the tenant may be overruled:

1. If the improvement is needed to maintain the property.
2. Where the improvements are consistent with local "practices and customs" or property management.
3. If the change is such as would increase the rental value in a normal market where free bargaining prevailed.

The rules were dispatched to all rent offices, Woods said.

DANGER OVERLOOKED

Plaster of Paris Held Infection Source

Plaster of Paris, in use all over the world for decades without sterilization, contains actual dangers of infection, according to Prof. E. G. D. Murray and Dr. G. D. Denton of McGill university.

The familiar white material used primarily as a cast for broken bones has long been overlooked as a source of infection, the university men said. A man in a Montreal hospital died unexpectedly after a knee operation, over which two successive leg plaster casts had been used. The medical men became suspicious of the plaster. Both casts had been thrown away, but Professor Murray investigated plaster taken from original tins. He found gas gangrene germs in 24 of 30 cans. Tetanus was found in two of the cans.

BONUS BILL:

Idea Won't Die

Tennessee's Representative Rankin was nothing if not persistent. The Democratic legislator again was planning a measure to obtain a bonus for U.S. war veterans.

THE chairman of the house veterans committee disclosed that he was grooming a multi-billion dollar bonus bill as a follow-up to veterans' pension legislation. He indicated he might seek action at this session.

Whether he knew it or not, he was in for some rough sledding, for even as he discussed the proposed measure, some members of his committee voiced the belief there would be no more major veterans' benefit bills reported out of committee at this session.

COMMENTING on his measure, Rankin said he regarded adjusted compensation — or bonus — as a possible solution to the whole question of veterans' benefits.

He has managed to bottle up measures to extend the "52-20" GI jobless pay beyond the July 25 expiration date, terming unemployment payments "rocking chair money."

The bonus bill, Rankin argued, "would deduct from the compensation all this sit-down money, on-the-job-training and college benefits."

AIRLIFT:

An Anniversary

The winged boxcar flew into Berlin's Templehof airdrome. It landed five tons of steel wool and textiles on the concrete airstrip at exactly 12 o'clock.

THE LANDING was accomplished in magnificent solitude.

However, it was an event of a sort that seldom goes unnoticed.

For that landing rounded out one solid year of "Operation Airlift" the hottest weapon in the cold war.

Despite that, it was probably one of the most unattended birthdays in history. The American twin-engine C-82, nicknamed "the flying boxcar," trundled to a loading station like any other plane.

THE FLIGHT, made by Lt. Michael B. Seeley, Bakersfield, Cal., was the 235,314th of the 365-day airlift. His load brought the total to a million, 943,655.9 tons of food, coal, machinery and other supplies that kept Berlin going during the Russian blockade.

The combined British-American task-force was dumping an average of 8,200 tons daily into the city with such ease nobody paid much attention to it any more.

WAGES:

Hike on Way?

A bill to increase the present minimum wage in the United States from 40 to 75 cents an hour had cleared its first hurdle and was on its way to further consideration.

THE measure was approved unanimously by the senate labor committee.

Senator Pepper (D., Fla.), a committee member, said the labor department figured that if the bill became law it would mean pay raises for about 1.25 million workers who in interstate commerce now make less than 75 cents an hour.

However, the senate committee did not go along with the idea that the law should be broadened to include many workers not covered by it now.

PEPPER said that the bill had been broadened so that it included only an additional 100,000 non-farm workers. These, he said, are engaged in processing agriculture products in so-called "areas of production."

"Farmers," he pointed out, "still would have the exemptions they now have."

Recovering

Eddie Waitkus, star first baseman of the Philadelphia Phillies, who was shot by 19-year old Ruth Steinhagen, was up and around again. It was believed he would be able to rejoin the team and play some more ball this season.

SEARCH:

Keep It Legal

The United States supreme court ruled that search and seizure must always be within the law and that states as well as the federal government must guarantee citizens protection against illegal practices.

BUT there was a difference. The court held that evidence illegally secured may be used in state courts, if state law so permits, but such evidence still cannot be used in federal courts.

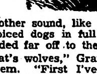
No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON



Tired of working as a hardware store clerk for 20 years, Andy Ives decides to move from Harbisonville to a plot of land given free by the state on condition that he stay there at least two years and make improvements. His family, consisting of Kate, his wife; Hope, his daughter; Dave, his son, and Granny, his mother-in-law, approves his suggestion and they begin the transition from the conveniences of small-town life to the pioneering of a wilderness. Hope, preferring to be with her family in their venture, rejects a proposal of marriage by Wall Harbison, son of a wealthy banker. Upon their arrival at their new home they are greeted by a neighbor, Emerson Eliot.

CHAPTER IV

"Who's Mr. Flipp?" Dave asked.

Mr. Eliot chuckled again, barely moving his lips. "Mr. Flipp is a very odd character and a man of rare attainments against this background. I live with him in a cabin a half mile from here." Then he rubbed his palms briskly. "But, come, I'm delaying you. Let's get the piano into the house."

"Oh, we'll handle it," Andy told him, fearing that the old fellow would hurt himself in some way, lifting. "It's pretty heavy."

"Of course, of course. Pianos are. But please don't worry about me; I'm in excellent condition. Here, Dave, swing it around a little more. There's nothing I'd rather lift than part of a piano, for I love music. It's the highest form of human expression."

Granny was staring at the old fellow, her eyes twinkling. "What have we here?" she asked softly. "A lecturer out of a job?"

"I'm wondering," Kate answered. "He certainly doesn't sound like what I expected to find in these woods!"

They were working the piano through the narrow door, onto the rough planks of the main room, when a lank figure, wearing a coonskin cap and knee-length gum boots, with garments of tattered, soiled khaki covering him between these extremities, came out of the woods and approached the scene. He walked with long, loose steps, and carried a slim rifle. Three fox squirrels swung from his belt, which was a length of rawhide untidily knotted around his thin middle. A shag of pale, sandy hair stuck from beneath the gray cap. His light-blue eyes surveyed the world sadly, and his thin, stubbled face seemed to mirror a large part of the world's suffering. Behind him came a gaunt, blue-ticked hound with long, floppy ears and ribs that could have been counted from a distance.

"O Mr. Flipp," Mr. Eliot called, "come lend a hand, will you? The force of gravity appears to be very strong at this point." Then he said, aside, to Andy, "Mr. Flipp fiddles!"

Absalom Flipp nodded, leaned his rifle against a sapling, without pausing or changing his gait, and came on. With a barely perceptible nod, he said, "Howdy, all," and found a handhold on the piano.

With this added strength, they soon had the piano in place against the wall to the right of the makeshift fireplace. Kate raised the lid and struck a chord or two.

A sad wail arose just outside the door, a doleful voice offering up the woes of its soul to waiting heaven: "Ahhhh-OOOOOH-ooooh!" It trailed off into a quavery minor, subsided lingeringly, then started again.

"Shet up, Jessie Bell!" roared Mr. Flipp. Then, in apology to the women: She al'us howls like that when they's music aroun'. Ever' time I fiddle, she does it. Looks like it hurts her somep'n awful."

"What's her name?" Dave asked. "Jessie Bell, you said?"

Mr. Flipp nodded. "I named her for a Bible character."

"There is no Jessie Bell in the Bible," Granny said positively.

Eliot and Flipp Bring Good Will

Mr. Flipp regarded her solemnly and with polite pity. "I ain't one to dispute a lady," he said gently, "but there's a Jessie Bell in the Bible. She was the wife of a king named Ahab. She got messed up in a quar'l with Elijah. When Jehu whupped Ahab an' his outfit, Jessie Bell got killed. They th'owed her to the dogs." He paused there, but briefly, before adding: "She was a hardheaded huzzy, so I named my dog after her, bein's she's hardheaded too."

"The woman in the Bible," Granny pointed out gently, "was named Jezebel."

"Yes, ma'am," Mr. Flipp agreed. "That's exactly whut I said."

Mr. Eliot winked at Andy, raised his brows a little. "Mr. Flipp is a keen student of the Bible," he said. "But let's finish the unloading. There is much to be done yet."

When he had gone out the door, Mr. Flipp said softly to those in the room: "I reckon you figger he's teched, but he ain't. It's jest 'cause he's got too much book learnin'. He went to college up north, where they make all them locks. Yale, ain't it?"

Hope started to laugh, then quickly decided that it would have been too rude a joke for even Mr. Flipp to perpetrate. "He went to Yale, really?" she asked.

"Shore. An' even now, old as he is, he reads ever' chance he gits! Jest sets an' reads—'cep'n when he's scrapin' his ol' fiddle, which he calls a violin. He pokes fun at me fer whut he calls fiddlin', but if I didn't git no more tunes than he gits, I'd hang the dern thing up an' let dirt robbers build nests in it! Now, Miz Ives, if you'll git me a pan, I'll dress these here squir'ls fer ye."

"Mr. Ives will dress them," Kate said. "It was enough for you to kill them and bring them to us, without having the trouble of dressing them. It's lovely of you, Mr. Flipp."

He reddened a little, cleared his throat. "Git me the pan. I can snatch the hides off'n these 'critters an' have 'em soakin' in salt water 'fore Mr. Ives could git started."

"But maybe Mrs. Flipp would like to have them for supper," Kate protested.

"They ain't no Miz Flipp. Besides, Mr. Eliot an' me have got coon fer supper, already cooked an' waitin'. Now, git me the pan."

"There should have been a Mrs. Flipp!" Kate said in thanking him.

Kate paled. "Wolves? Are you sure, Mother?"

"She would have been a lucky woman, with as handy a husband as you around!"

"Well, I don't know, Miz Ives," Absalom said, shaking his head slowly. "I'm awfully ornery at times. Mebbe I wouldn't be if I had a ol' lady, but then I might be wuss. Can't tell. Anyhow, like it is, I kin go an' come, or stay put, jest as I want to, an' they ain't a soul kin say a word 'bout it. Besides, they's another reason I'm stayin' single: Looks like women these days is gittin' too dang' bossy, an' 'twouldn't s'prise me, 'fore long, if they got to thinkin' they was as good as men. I'm a'tellin' you, they'd shore be some fur afiyin' if I had me a wife an' she tried to make me hop ever' time she said, 'Frog!' "

"Some women are ridiculous, aren't they?" Granny put in, a keen light in her eye. "Thinking they're as good as men! Absurd, isn't it?"

"Plum' outlandish," Mr. Flipp agreed. "Ain't no tellin' whur it'll end, neither. Jest no tellin' a-tall!"

When night closed in, the cabin seemed smaller and flimsier, and the great woods about them was a land of quiet and mystery. Light from the oil lamps was dim. "But it makes the firelight prettier," said Hope. "With electric lights, we wouldn't enjoy the open fire so much." And Granny commended her for such thinking. "At last, a philosopher among us!"

"I like our neighbors," said Kate. "I mean, the two we've seen. My guess is that Mr. Flipp and his bony Jessie Bell are going to be interesting."

Andy Looks Over His Land

"Old Mr. Eliot too," said Andy. "What's a man like that doing down here in the swamp?"

"Living the way he wants to," Granny told him. "Just being here and being satisfied with this way of living marks him as a strong character." She sniffed with feeling. "But that Flipp person! A Bible scholar, is he?"

"A fiddler too," Dave said. "Say, I bet they have some regular knockdown, drag-out country dances in these hyar parts!"

"I hear noises," Kate broke in. "Do bears grunt?"

"Those are hogs," Andy told her. "Sounds like a big drove, with pigs mixed in."

"Wild hogs?" Dave asked. "Reckon they're real wild ones?"

"Half wild, I guess," Andy told him. "But somebody owns them, and they have the run of the swamp, making their own living. That's the way it is in some sections of the country."

Then another sound, like a pack of shrill-voiced dogs in full chase. They sounded far off to the south.

"And that's wolves," Granny informed them. "First I've heard since I was a little girl up on The White."

Kate paled. "Wolves? Are you sure, mother?"

Dave's eyes were wide with excitement. Andy cleared his throat. Hope's lids were parted and she looked downright scared.

"I'm sure it's wolves," Granny declared. "In winter they range out of the big river bottom and cover a lot of territory. The river's not far from here, is it, Andy?"

"About fifteen miles," he answered. "I don't hear them any more."

"You may not hear them again this winter," the old lady said. "Then again, you may hear them every night or two. Depends on their range."

They went to bed early, but it seemed late. Andy and Dave slept on the bed they had set up in the kitchen. The three women shared the main room.

Although it was the end of a wearisome day, Kate didn't fall asleep for a long time. There was so much to think about! Tomorrow they must start to work making a home—a home in the wilderness—where one could hear wolves at night!

Beyond the thin wall, on the bed with Dave, who was sound asleep, Andy lay awake, thinking, planning —hoping. When they were still in Harbisonville, with comforts and a routinized life, the prospect of this had been glowing. He had dreamed of escaping from the rut that he had worn deeper year after year. This remote and different life had promised freedom, peace of mind, a chance to progress through his own work and planning. But now that they were here, pressed by a thousand realities, beckoned by unforeseen necessities, some of the glow of adventure had dimmed. Yet Andy Ives knew that if their sense of adventure dulled and life became humdrum he would be lost! Tomorrow, at once, they must start to work. He heard the hogs again.

After breakfast the next morning Andy and Dave walked over the place.

Andy kicked in the dirt, and rolled black, loamy soil from beneath the dry-weather crust. "This is it, Dave!" he said. "This is the land that'll grow things for us. Look at it."

Dave looked. "I don't know much about land," he said.

"It's rich and black and workable. Look back toward the house and you'll see what we've got to clear up. Our fields will lie through there."

"It's hard to imagine a field where all this tangle is now," Dave said.

"Most of America was like this once," Andy said almost reverently. "Work put fields where there had been forests and thickets. Work can do it again, Dave."

The Family Car Is Sacrificed

Off to the south stretched lower land, thicker grown. They stood at the edge of a deep, gloomy swamp, a region of brakes and bogs and slashes inhabited by frogs, mosquitoes, and snakes, by squirrels, possums, and coons. Even at that season, with most of the growth leafless, they could see but a little way into the tangle. What it must be in summer they could scarcely imagine. Then it would be alive with crawling, flying, wallowing things; but on this winter morning it lay silent, except for the noise of feeding "squealers"—wood ducks —in some hidden slough.

Near the southeast corner of the tract, they found where hogs had been rooting for roots and acorns. The hogs had worked over a considerable area, rolling up thick turf holes and wallows, leaving dried ridges of grass and trash.

"It's either a big bunch of hogs," Andy reasoned, "or they spent a lot of their time here. I don't like this."

"They'd be rough on a crop of corn," Dave said. "We'll have to fence things in."

"Or else the man who owns the hogs will have to put 'em up," Andy said flatly. "I'll have to find out whose they are, and have a talk with him."

They came to the east line of the place and followed along that side. Not far from the house, they found a growth of small cypress fringing a slough.

"These will be about right for the barn," Andy said, pleased. "And maybe for the house too."

"Why not use harder wood for building?" Dave asked. "Won't cypress rot mighty bad?"

Andy chuckled. "Son, that's one thing cypress won't do very quick. It lasts like iron. Water doesn't have much effect on it. You'll see."

There was little they could do without a team and a wagon, and although it was unpleasant to think of being without a car, the time had come to give theirs up. When Hope asked, not complainingly but for information, "How'll we go places?" Andy said, "We won't need to; we're there now."

Vibration In Washing Machine

One of our readers, noting an item about a vibrating washing machine solved a similar problem to her satisfaction, and wrote as follows: "If she (the other reader) will be sure to pack the clothes in very firmly and tightly, and keep turning the grease cup as per instructions, she will find the vibrating has almost ceased except, of course, in the case of heavy articles such as overalls, rugs, etc. If she can keep the washing part full of water and sort of lean on it, it is barely noticeable even with these heavy articles." I am glad to pass this along for the benefit of other readers who have had the same difficulty.

Polio Still Increases

The four years from 1943 through 1946 constitute the longest period of sustained high incidence of infantile paralysis in the United States. In 1946 there were 25,000 cases.

Uncle Sam Says

That old saw about opportunity must be revised. The new version is —Opportunity Knocks but Once—a Week. Every payday you have the opportunity to do something about those things you want in the future. All it takes is a little slice of that paycheck invested regularly in U. S. Savings Bonds. There are two ways to make that future secure—the Payroll Savings Plan where you work or, if self-employed, the Bond-a-Month Plan where you bank. In ten years, every $3 invested brings back $4.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Windy Sure "Stopped The Show"!

The other night a bunch of us were over at Judge Cunningham's watching a swell vaudeville program on his new television set. It came in fine, but just once, the screen got a little streaky.

Before the Judge could touch the knob to bring it into focus, old Windy Taylor starts fooling around with the antenna connection. "I can fix that!" he says.

Windy fixed it all right. He "stopped the show" for us, and Buzz Ellis had to come over and do a $20 repair job. I understand Windy feels so bad, that he's paying the bill and has apologized to the Judge for acting so smart.

From where I sit, it pays to practice a little restraint whenever we get the urge to meddle. Whether it's television or a person's right to enjoy a temperate glass of sparkling beer now and then—let's get a good clear "picture" of the real situation before we cause more harm than good,

Raising Turkeys

Turkeys and chickens should be kept in separate quarters, a good distant apart, if possible. Chickens may carry certain diseases and transmit them to turkeys, even when the chickens are not visibly affected. If turkeys are weak or droopy, develop running noses or other signs of poor health, obtain veterinary diagnosis at once.

Lesson From Animals

Man learned how to swim by watching animals, who usually need no lessons, but just go into a swimming motion when they hit the water. Man learned because he had seen too many of his fellow men come to a quick end when they fell into the water.

Threat to Public Health

Among the more than 70 diseases that infected animals can spread to humans, brucellosis now stands out as one of the three most serious threats to public health. The other two are sleeping sickness and rabies.

Early Days of Football

About 75 years ago a group of Cornell university students asked their famous president, Andrew Dickson White, if they might be excused from classes to journey from Ithaca, N. After due deliberation, President White replied, "I will not permit 30 men to travel 400 miles merely to agitate a bag of wind."

Causes of Tire Wear

Mechanical irregularities such as misalignment of either front or rear wheels, spring axles, sprung axle housings, worn bushings, bent wheels, grabbing brakes, unbalance, and many other mechanical factors contribute to the uneven wear of tires.

Step Up Penicillin 'Crops'

Production of penicillin "crops" can be stepped up through X-ray treatment of the molds in a new process patented recently, according to National Patent Council. Doses of 50,000 to 150,000 roentgen units are applied to mold spores. Though most of the spores are killed, those remaining are newly induced, mutated strains which produce larger "crops."

Larson-Conklin Weddimg

The Nazareth Lutheran church was the scene of a pretty wedding Sunday evening, July 17, when Lois Mae Larson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Larson, became the bride of Milton D. Conklin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Art Conklin. The double ring ceremony was read by Rev. V. G. Sorenson in the presence of 110 guests. The altar was banked with blue and white flowers.

Miss Delores Sandberg played fifteen minutes of organ music while the guests were being seated and the wedding march as the bridal party proceeded down the aisle.

Just before the ceremony Mrs. Ernest Hanson, sister of the bride sang "O, Perfect Love" and Rev. Sorenson sang "The Lord's Prayer" while the couple were kneeling.

The bride wore a white sheer formal. Her fingertip veil was bordered with lace and held in place with an orange blossom tiara. She carried a bridal bouquet of pink roses and white carnations with white streamers, her only jewelry a locket and bracelet a gift of the groom.

Miss Delores Engen was bridesmaid and wore a sheer blue formal. Her corsage was of pink roses and white carnations and she wore a tiara of white carnations in her hair. Her string of pearls was a gift from the bride.

The groom was attended by Melvin Larson, brother of the bride, as best man. Ushers were Irvin Larson and Marlan Augustine. The groom, best man, ushers fathers and grandfathers all had carnations boutenieres.

The bride's mother wore a black and white silk print dress and the groom's mother a light blue suit. Mrs. J. G. Conklin, grandmother of the groom, wore a pink and white dress. They all wore corsages.

Immediately following the ceremony the brides parents were hosts at a reception in the church parlors. The bridal table was decorated with blue and white streamers and centered with a three-tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom. Bouquets of mixed garden flowers graced the tables. Mrs. Reuben Benitt poured, Mrs. Art Lunke and Jo Ann Benitt were waitresses and Mrs. Ernest Hanson had charge of the guest book.

Mrs. Conklin is a graduate of the Newfolden high school and Teachers Training Department at Thief River Falls, and has the past year taught at Strathcona. The groom is a graduate of the the Newfolden high school and is engaged in farming on his fathers farm where they will make their home.

LOOKING AHEAD

by GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College, Searcy, Arkansas

Is Bigness Bad?

Many critics of our American system use big business as a special target for their attacks. According to their charges, big business throttles competition, creates monopolies, maltreats labor, and kills small enterprises. Their attitude toward big business represents more than a natural dislike for bigness in business. It also shows their shrewdness in using the propaganda weapon to destroy our system.

If they should succeed in getting public opinion on their side, it soon would be reflected in legislation which could well destroy this segment of our economy, and eventually turn our entire economy into state socialism.

"Grown Up" Business

Big business is nothing but small business grown up. They grew up because the public allowed them to do so. No business can become big business without public approval. Public approval cannot be bought. It is earned through the hard-work process of competing against scores of other companies and giving John Q. Public a better washing machine, dress, or automobile for his money. As demand for a product grows, facilities must be increased to meet that demand. A business grows as the public, with its buying, dictates.

Good Dividends

As business grows, it becomes more efficient and makes possible real savings to the public. Our $1,500 mass produced automobile would cost $50,000 if built with the tools of 1900. Mass purchasing, production and distribution result in economies impossible to small business. Larger investment provides also the necessary extensive research demanded by keen competition.

This huge investment pays dividends to workers, too. Labor-saving tools multiply the productive capacity of the worker and ease the load from his back. This greater production allows him higher pay and shorter hours and puts him in a class far above workmen of any other nation.

Bad for Whom?

Small business has fared well in this progress story. You see, big business has created thousands of enterprises that owe their existence to its production. Without the huge output provided by the automotive industry, the average city would be without its many accessory stores, radiator shops, repair shops, filling stations, parking lots, and garages. Far from being exterminated, small business continues to develop.

Big business has made a striking contribution to our nation's prosperity and progress. As long as it is operated by human beings, there will be occasions for justifiable criticism. However, minor criticisms must not be allowed to destroy the true importance of big business to a growing nation. It is essential to a continued dynamic economy. The public, having created big business, will further prosper by its continuance.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

After 20 years of clerking in a hardware store, Andy Ives decides he can only realize his ambition of owning his own farm by taking a free tract of land offered by the state to those people who will live there at least two years and cultivate the wilderness about them. He, together with his family consisting of his wife, Kate; his daughter, Hope; his son, Dave and his mother-in-law, Granny, is enthused by the idea of modern pioneering and they arrive at their new home eager for adventure and undaunted by the swampland. Upon their arrival they are welcomed by two neighbors, Emerson Eliot and his friend, Absalom Flipp, both of whom are bachelors.

CHAPTER V

"We'll need a cow too," Granny said. "When you get your mules and wagon, buy a fresh cow and hitch her to the back of the wagon before you start home."

Andy nodded, glanced at Kate. "I'll try to find a gentle one for you to milk," he teased.

"I've never milked a cow, Andy Ives! You know it. I'm too old to start now."

"But that's a woman's job in this country," he told her, pretending to be serious. "Part of the housework. You wouldn't want your husband to lower himself in the eyes of his neighbors by helping out with the housework."

"I'll want you to lower yourself enough to get down and do the milking," she declared. "I'll do my part, Andy, but I've always been afraid of a cow."

"I'm not," Granny put in. "I'll take care of the milking."

"And I'll help," said Hope. "We'll get Bossy's morning and evening offering. You can depend on that."

There was some figuring to do before making any purchase that wasn't absolutely necessary. The car would bring, possibly, five or six hundred dollars, for used automobiles were much in demand. The mules and the wagon would cost about half of that. In addition, they needed various plows and tools. There would be little money left, and out of that must come wire, seed for planting, and provisions to last them until next fall, when crop-selling time came—if there was a crop to sell! Aside from what the car represented, Andy had little money. And now there would be no monthly pay from Mr. Jaynes to depend on. Thinking of that gave him a weak, cold feeling. Yet they must have a cow, and he would strain a point to get one, even if he had to buy feed for her until grass time next spring.

He and Dave went to work at once, building an enclosure with poles. They had an ax and a post-hole digger, a hammer and nails. By midafternoon they had finished the job. It was a strong fence, enclosing a rectangle, and there was a cross fence which cut off a comfortable portion for the cow, where she would be safe from the mules.

Mr. and Mrs. Hartley Webster came at four o'clock, arriving in a noisy pickup truck that roared like a superfortress, because it lacked a muffler.

"Don't stop whatever you're doin'," Mrs. Webster begged Kate. "We don't want to butt in. Harley just said we'd come by an' I said all right, only we mustn't stay an' bother—"

"Oh, we're not that busy," Kate cut in. "So glad you came by. Are you our neighbors?"

"We live three quarters from here," Mr. Webster told her. "Howdy, Ives," he said loudly as Andy and Dave came around the house. "My little woman, Birdie there, said let's drop by the Ives place an' chew the rag a while, so I—"

"Harley!" Mrs. Webster cut in, turning very red. "Now, Harley, it was you who said let's go by an' see the Iveses, an' I said all right but we mustn't bother—"

"All right, sugah, maybe it was me. Don't matter nohow. Well, Ives, you gittin' fixed up a little, I see."

"An' I didn't say anything 'bout chewin' the rag," Mrs. Webster assured Kate. "Harley put it like that hisself." She lowered her voice: "Harley's mighty good, but I have to watch 'im closte, or he'll leave the wrong impression sometimes. He's a hard worker, but last summer he got a touch of athaletic foot an'—"

Mixed Religions In the Wilderness

"Won't you come in?" Kate invited, struggling to keep her face straight.

"If you're sure you ain't too busy to stop." And, as she followed Kate into the cabin, she added, her voice trailing off wearily, "He cured it by plowin' barefooted in the hot, dry field."

Mr. Webster remained outside with Andy and Dave, and was pleased when Andy solicited his advice concerning the building that lay ahead.

In the house, Mrs. Webster took a chair reluctantly, saying: "We can't stay but a minute. I know you've got so much to do, gittin' straightened out here an' ready for the awful job that's ahead of you."

"Is it that bad?" Kate asked. "You scare me."

"Well, me'n Harley come out here three years ago, an' we pitched in workin'. That was in the late fall, an' Harley got the malarial, with chills an' fever, till he couldn't work. Nothin' he et agreed with him, an' he was fallin' off ever' day. I got him to go to bed, fin'ly, an' I wrote my cousin that lives in Washington County, who has a doctor uncle, an' she sent me some quinine. It's awful hard to git, you know. So, I give Harley a course of quinine, an' he mended right peart after the eighth doste."

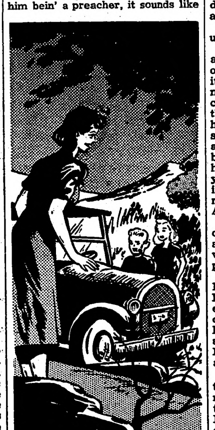
"Nothing better than quinine for malaria," Granny said firmly.

"We know it will take a world of work," Kate told her. "And, looking at the land now, I wonder if we ever can do much with it."

"It's hard," said Birdie Webster. "Awful hard. But as Brother Cowann says, 'Blessed are those that labor, for they shall harvest.'"

"That's not in the Bible, is it?" asked Granny. "I mean, in those words."

"No'm, I don't reckin so. Brother Cowann just made it up, an' him bein' a preacher, it sounds like it's from the Bible. Y'all will come to our church, won't you?"



"An' you must come to see us too, Davey. We've got a daughter about your age. Her name's Oreen."

"We expect to attend church," Kate told her. "What denomination is the church out here?"

"Well, Brother Cowann started out a Methodist, I think, but there wasn't enough Methodists out here for a church, or Baptists either, or Presbyterians; an' so we all pitched in together an' built a house of the Lord for us all an' we worship together. If somebody joins an' wants to be sprinkled, Brother Cowann sprinkles him; if he wants to be immersed, Brother Cowann immerses him; and so on. He is a consecrated man, we all think." She paused, then added in a hushed voice, "He had the athaletic foot last summer too."

Birdie Imparts Some Bad News

"There'll be lots of things we'll want to ask you and Mr. Webster," Kate said, changing the subject. "We're awfully green about this kind of life, and we'll have to depend on the experience of others in lots of things."

"We'll be proud to share our experience with you," Birdie assured her. "You know, Harley an' me could've took up this tract if we'd wanted to. We looked over it an' then decided on the place where we are now."

"What turned you against this one?" Kate wanted to know. She sensed that the woman was eager to impart certain information of the kind that cannot be tactfully given except under questioning. "Was there something wrong with this quarter section that made you decide against it?"

"Oh, it'll be good land when you've got it cleared up," Mrs. Webster said evasively. "Good as a crow ever flew over, I reckin."

"But there were things wrong with it," Kate insisted. "What were they? Tell us, so we can face them better when the time comes."

"Well, there was just some little things, you know," Mrs. Webster said, a note of sympathy and apology commingling in her voice. "For one thing, the land south of your house overflows worse when the bayou's up than where we are. Course, you might get some drainage ditches dug an' stop a lot of that. Ditches cost money, though."

"What else is wrong with it?" Kate asked. "That's bad enough, but aren't there other drawbacks too?"

"Yes, ma'am, there's another thing or two, but I oughtn't to be tellin' you these things. They ain't no use in makin' you downhearted right at the start. Maybe I better not tell—"

"We can take it," Hope broke in. "It'll be a help later."

"Well, you're goin' to have trouble with them hogs. They belong to Mr. Sig Flanagan, at Newcastle, an' he's going to be a hard man for you to deal with. One thing, he's in with the county ring, an' that's bad. They don't like us people out here. They call us 'donators,' an' they pointedly despise us."

"But why?" Kate begged. "What have we done to them?"

"Nothin', but we're clearin' up the country where they've hunted deer for years. It was their wilderness, they figure, an', from the sheriff down, they ain't goin' to be much help to you if there's trouble. You'll see."

This was far worse than the menace of overflow or the nature of Sig Flanagan, hog owner.

"And," Birdie Webster hurried on, "there's the big swamp just south of your place!" She glanced at the wall on that side of the cabin. "I just wouldn't live near it." She shuddered. "But I don't reckin you'll be afraid of 'Deefy,' like I would."

"'Deefy'?" Hope asked, perking up. "Who is he?"

Mrs. Webster spoke scarcely above a whisper: "I seen him just oncet an' that was a glimpse, but it give me the cold shivers. He's a miratiously big Nigger, black as charcoal, that lives down in the thick swamp somewheres. They say he eats snakes an' frogs raw; they say he's so quick he can lean over a slough an' ketch a fish with his bare hand, he's so quick; they say he's so stout he can grab a bull yearlin' by the hind legs an' bat its brains out against a saplin', then make off with it under his arm. An' they say—"

"I don't believe all that," Granny cut in. "All sorts of stories get out about such people. He's likely a very unfortunate creature, and people—"

"Oh, but wait'll you see him," Mrs. Webster broke in. "Just wait! Howsomever, you'll hear him oftener than you'll see him, fer when he comes to the edge of the swamp to look aroun', he sometimes lets out a squall you can hear fer a mile. It'll make yore blood run cold. It ain't human, an' it ain't animal."

Before the Websters left—and their visit lasted until late afternoon, despite Birdie's original intention to remain but a minute—the Iveses had learned some further details of unsavory nature connected with their new home. The house in which they now dwelt had once been the residence of a locally notorious moonshiner. Later it had become the camp house of county politicos, in deer season. The section near the thick swamp abounded in rattlesnakes.

And just before they departed, when Birdie had reavowed her intention not to bother, she touched lightly upon the topic of Messrs. Eliot and Flipp:

"They say ol' man Eliot went to a college," she said sadly, "but if he did, why ain't he teachin' school? Why, I ask you?"

"Maybe he learned enough in college to know better," Hope offered.

Mrs. Webster viewed her with a hurt expression. "Well, it does seem to me that if he has all that book learnin' he could do somethin' better'n fish. That's what he does: he fishes!" Then she lowered her voice. "An' he argies with Brother Cowann on the Bible too. Course, Brother Cowann ain't a ordained preacher, but he was called, he says; an' Mr. Eliot ain't called to ask bothersome questions!"

She looked disturbed then and shrugged apologetically. "I declare when Harley gits to talkin', he don't know when to stop. His daddy was the same way. They called him 'Empty Wagon' Webster."

"Why?" Hope wanted to know. "That's an odd nickname!"

Dave Receives a Special Invitation

"'Cause a empty wagon makes the most noise," said Birdie Webster.

Just before they climbed into the pickup, when Mr. Webster was giving Andy some parting hints on how to select the best logs for building, Mrs. Webster said to Dave:

"An' you must come to see us too, Davey. We've got a daughter about your age. Her name's Oreen."

Dave turned a light cerise and flashed a look of mingled misery and warning at Hope. "Yes'm," he said.

"Ever'body says Oreen's mighty pretty," Mrs. Webster added, "but course I can't afford to say it, bein's she's my own flesh an' blood. Well, Harley, let's get along. Maybe we're botherin' the Iveses. They've got a lot to do, an' you know it."

"I'm ready, sugah. Been waitin' an hour for you to come out. Well, Ives, bring your little family over to see us some time. Make it a real visit; don't just pop-call like we do."

Then they roared away, leaving the family of Andrew and Kate Ives with several thing to think about.

"We'd better call this Horror Manor," Hope suggested. "We'll get washed away, come spring, or rattlers will come out of the swamp and chew on us! If we escape these grim threats, there's a monstrous deaf mute stealing about in the woods."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

New Taft-Hartley Battle Looms; Solons Ridicule Recession Idea; Dictator Feared in Defense Plan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

TAFT-HARTLEY:

Another Try

The administration hadn't given up, despite a humiliating setback in the senate by Taft-Hartley law supporters. It was reported that President Truman's congressional aides were planning another try at repealing the measure, but had reached no decision.

THIS CAME to light after House Speaker Sam Rayburn concluded a conference with the President. The decision on a new repealer effort was to await further conferences with labor committee members in both houses.

While the persistence of the administration might be comendable, the wisdom in any further effort toward a Taft-Hartley repealer was doubtful. A majority of top leaders had conceded there was little hope of getting the bill changed at this session of congress, and all, including administration leaders, were willing to make the question an issue in the 1950 congressional elections.

THE RESULT of the vote on changing the Taft-Hartley labor law was confusing to the average observer of the political scene. If labor had played as important a part as it was conceded in the election of President Truman—and with congressional elections up next year—how could so many senators have found the courage to fly into the face of what might seem certain defeat?

On the other hand, if labor's role in politics is as negligible as others claim, why was the administration pressing so hard for the Taft-Hartley repealer. One thing appeared certain: There were many congressmen sufficiently unimpressed with labor's political importance that they didn't mind going contrary to labor's wishes on the Taft-Hartley issue.

RECESSION:

Ho, Ho, Ho!

With unemployment figures standing at the highest peak in 11 years, and many nationwide organizations and national leaders casting about for a bulwark against economic hazards, congressional leaders were laughing at the idea the nation might be edging into a depression.

THEY had just conferred with President Truman and upon emerging from the conference ridiculed the notion that all might not be as rosy as possible with the nation's economic picture.

If the lawmakers were out on a limb, they were way out, for House Speaker Rayburn and the senate Democratic leader, Scott Lucas, minced no words in expressing their optimism.

"WITH 58 million people employed in industry and 30 million farmers with money to pay for whatever they need, I'll be——if I see how you can call it a recession," Rayburn declared.

Said Lucas: "If it is, it's the most prosperous one we've ever experienced."

MEANWHILE, it was said President Truman was preparing a special economic message for delivery to congress. It was expected to carry recommendations for dealing with declining prices and the unemployment situation.

Out of all this came repetition of the additional-taxes proposal. Asked about that, Rayburn said it had yet to be determined. He did not make it clear whether he meant President Truman is reconsidering his plea for four billion dollars in additional taxes a year, or whether the matter is still up in the air in congress.

NEW HOMES:

More Cash

Buyers planning to finance homes through FHA-insured mortgages may have to make larger down payments from now on.

THE federal housing administration had cautioned its underwriters to consider declining construction costs when appraising houses for insured loans.

The result, the agency said, would be lower mortgages on many new homes. If the builder fails to cut his selling price in line with lower costs, the down payment will be higher.

THE decline in building costs and materials have been noted since late last year, the underwriters were told. Most materials are plentiful, it was said, and production rates of workers in many sections have improved.

Newlyweds

Governor Fuller Warren of Flordia and a honey blonde daughter of California, the former Barbara Mannipg, are shown as they left the reception following their wedding in California.

DEFENSE:

Dictator Feared

In nearly all discussions concerning unification of the nation's armed services, one thing stood out—many congressmen feared the possibility of a "military dictator" if framers of a unification bill weren't careful.

THIS feeling was put into words by Georgia's Representative Vinson who proposed several amendments to the pending bill, declaring that he wanted to make sure no military dictator ever arises in the United States. Vinson, a Democrat, is chairman of the house armed services committee.

The amendments he proposed would take the armed forces out from beyond the recently enacted government reorganization law, and put them beyond a shuffling by President Truman; put a civilian chairman over the joint chiefs of staff, a body which includes the highest officers of the army, navy and air force, and fix the membership of the national security council by law, requiring that other members be subject to approval by the senate.

THESE AMENDMENTS were proposed to a unification bill which already has passed the senate. The measure is one which would increase the direct authority of the secretary of defense over the armed forces.

Louis Johnson, who holds that post, has told the house committee he needs that authority to make the 1947 unification act work. He pledged to save over a billion dollars a year in operation of the military services if the bill were passed, and a civilian manager put in charge.

INTELLECT:

Women's Best?

If two Indiana university professors are to be believed, then the male of the species must face an unpleasant fact—namely, that girls (or women) can reason better than boys (or men).

THE professorial gentlemen claimed, and cited figures for proof, that the female is the superior of the male in the reasoning department, and this despite ten million jokes, books, philosophical discourses and general experience to the contrary.

The professors say unequivocally that given a set of circumstances, the lassies can come up with more logical answers than boys can do. These gentlemen are Dr. William H. Fox and Prof. Nicholas A. Fattu of the research division of Indiana university's school of education.

They made the tests in two high schools, one in a city of 11,000 in north central Indiana, and the other in a consolidated rural school near Indianapolis.

TO USE the professors' own words in the report:

"Scores on the interpretation of date test, seeking to establish their relationship to measures of achievement, personality and interest, found no differentiation . . . but there was a clear cut advantage for girls in both schools in ability to reason, to see relationships, to make comparisons and to suspend judgment until pertinent facts are collected."

To which many a male will counter: Too bad they seem to lose those faculties when they grow up.

MUNICIPAL INCOME

Property Tax Declines as Revenue Source

American cities were facing an unpleasant fact—general property taxation as a source of revenue was proving inadequate to meet municipal needs.

The International City Managers' association reported the finding after a survey of municipal-revenue sources. Data was gathered from census returns and from reporting members.

In five years from 1942 to 1947, the proportion of municipal income obtained from property taxation compared with that from other sources dropped 8.4 per cent. Slightly more than half of municipal revenues now come from property taxes. In cities of over 25,000 population revenue has increased by 13.2 per cent, while the property tax increased by only 5.9 per cent.

How Aging Is Shown

Aging is shown in body cells in several ways. Many people shrink with age. Others will put on bulk with the years. Those who shrink live longer. And this is the reason. Instead of shrinking, some cells may collect and store up dull, inert material like calcium, the little brown granules in the cells of the heart, and especially fat. This kind of aging causes more trouble than quiet shrinking. Aging is well on its way when fatty substances collect in the cells and in the arteries, particularly in their inside lining. This is one form of hardening of the arteries.

Garden 'Greens' Can Be Continuous

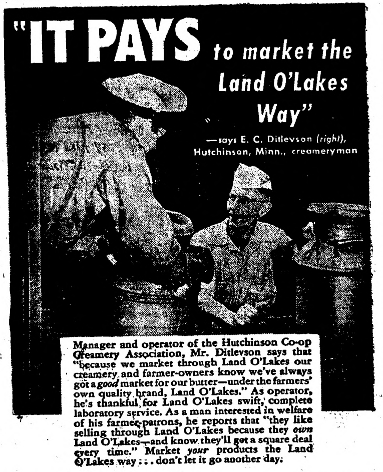
Plenty of leafy vegetables, raw and cooked, are necessary in the diet of both children and grownups in order to promote vigor and well-being. In a home garden they can be continuous for many months if various kinds are grown.

Leaf lettuce is one of the first green things to appear. The young leaves can be picked for the table when only a couple of inches in length while the smaller inner leaves are left to grow. The same is true of spinach; the tender new leaves are as good raw as cooked when chopped and served with oil and vinegar dressing. Or, treat them the same as "wilted lettuce" by pouring over them a mixture of hot bacon fat, vinegar, and bits of cooked bacon. To vary the flavor of these greens, add a small amount of peppergrass. The frilled curly foliage of this upland cress is as easy to grow as lettuce.

For long season greens swiss chard is a winner. No leafy vegetable stands hot weather better. The outer leaves should be kept picked, the inner ones left to continue growing, and the result will be tender, brittle stalks and leaves for a long time.

Of the numerous root tops used as greens, beet, mustard, and turnip are increasingly popular. Like all vegetables they are best when young. Mustard and turnip particularly should be used for greens only in the early stages. The tops of mustard and turnip combined are appetizing—a favorite of grandmother's day.

By sowing seed of kale in spring or summer in the North and August to October in the South, fresh greens can be picked from the garden even after the coming of frost and light snow. In fact, some frost improves the texture and flavor of kale, making it a real treat for late autumn and winter meals. Dwarf Curled Kale is one of the best varieties for home gardens.



"IT PAYS to market the Land O'Lakes Way"
—says E. C. Ditlevson (right), Hutchinson, Minn., creameryman

Manager and operator of the Hutchinson Co-op Creamery Association, Mr. Ditlevson says that "because we market through Land O'Lakes our creamery and farmer-owners know we've always got a good market for our butter—under the farmers' own quality brand, Land O'Lakes." As operator, he's thankful for Land O'Lakes swift, complete laboratory service. As a man interested in welfare of his farmer-patrons, he reports that "they like selling through Land O'Lakes because they own Land O'Lakes—and know they'll get a square deal every time." Market your products the Land O'Lakes way . . . don't let it go another day.

Driver's Habits

Some drivers wear out tires in 10,000 miles or less, others in 20,000 miles, some get 30,000 miles, and others greater average mileages. This is largely due to a driver's habits and operating conditions. "Jackrabbit" starts, sudden stops, excessive use of brakes, high speeds on curves and frequent stops and starts in traffic all tend to wear away tread rubber and rob the tire of miles of life!

Tzintzuntazan

At the time of the Spanish conquest, Tzintzuntazan, in the state of Michoacan, west of Mexico City, was the center of the Tarascan empire, second in importance only to the Aztecs. Tzintzuntazan today is a place of about 1,000 people, of mixed Spanish and Indian blood, who have lost a great many elements of their ancient culture which made them the chief rivals of the people of Montezuma, notes the Smithsonian Institution. The Spaniards described a city of 40,000, although this figure undoubtedly included rather widespread suburbs.

Great Clock of Strasbourg

One of the most unusual clocks in the world is the great clock in the Cathedral of Strasbourg, France. This clock not only tells the hour and the positions of the heavenly bodies, but also points to the day of the month, according to the World Book Encyclopedia. Below the dial which tells the time of day is a procession of gods and godesses which show the days of the week. Quarter hours are struck by figures on the clock, one of which turns an hourglass. At noon each day a procession of the apostles appears, while a cock above crows three times.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Andy Ives and his family give up their comfortable home to do some modern pioneering in southern Arkansas where Andy receives free land in return for working there at least two years, clearing the swamp for productive planting. He, his wife, Kate; daughter, Hope; son, Dave, and mother-in-law, Granny, arrive at their new home only slightly shaken by the extreme wilderness surrounding it. They are greeted by their new neighbors, Emerson Eliot and Absalom Flipp and later another family, the Websters, pay their respects. Birdie and Harley Webster inform Dave they have a daughter, Oreen, about his age. The family thoroughly discourages the Ives about their new home.

CHAPTER VI

"She said he was 'mirations'," Granny recalled. "Pretty good word it strikes me."

"And we learned that our first callers and nearest neighbors are two crazy men!" Kate put in. "Isn't there anybody normal around here?"

"All depends on what you call 'normal,' " Andy told her. "If you mean to ask whether there are people here like you were used to, then the answer's no. They'll get more and more normal, the longer you know them, though. Watch and see."

"Did Mr. Webster give you any ideas on how to go about the building?" Kate wanted to know.

"Lots of 'em. And he's coming to help when we start too."

"Well, the building comes first," Kate said positively. "You're ready to start now; we must have more room here, Andy."

"Just as soon as I get the mules, so I can haul the things I'll need. I'll drive to town in the morning and sell the car."

"And when you get the cow," said Granny, "get some chickens too. We'll have to have chickens."

Andy nodded. "Sure. I'll try to find somebody with chickens to sell."

"And when we get the house remodeled," said Hope, "we'll have a little party for everybody. Isn't it the thing to do? Housewarming, they call it?"

"It would be nice," Granny agreed. "People back in the sticks always want to meet newcomers, and I think we should show them right from the first that we're friendly. If they get the idea that we're not, that we're inclined to be 'uppity,' they'll avoid us like poison!"

"Then we'll have the party," said Kate. "We certainly want to be liked down here. It'll be lonesome enough at best; it would be dreadful if the few people around here disliked us!"

Hope looked at Dave, who met her glance and reddened, for he knew what she was thinking. It was in her eyes, in the threat of a teasing smile that played about her mouth.

"Go on and say it!" he said. "Kid me about that Oreen, about how her mamma wants me to meet Oreen!"

"Dave, you're a mind reader!" Hope exclaimed. "That's what I was thinking about. Oreen's pretty too; her mother said so, didn't she, Dave?"

"Now, Hope," Granny broke in. "Don't make Dave dislike the girl before he even sees her. Maybe she is pretty and sweet and attractive."

"Ugh!" Dave grunted, not sure now that Granny herself wasn't teasing. " 'Oreen'! Sounds like some kind of mouthwash!" And he promptly sought the outside. "Her mamma calls me 'Davey'!" he growled.

But he stopped in the doorway, called back over his shoulder: "Mr. Flipp's coming. He has two dogs this time."

Flipp Makes a Touching Gesture

Absalom Flipp looked just as he had looked yesterday, except that the dirty stubble on his narrow face was twenty-four hours longer. This condition tended to strengthen his air of lone-and-lornness, as he approached the cabin, each thumping step followed by a light sucking sound as his narrow heels worked up and down in the gum boots he wore. He carried his rifle.

Jessie Bell, the hound, was close behind him; and in her wake there came a younger dog of the same general type and fully as skinny and doleful of feature as Jessie Bell.

"Howdy, Dave," Mr. Flipp called sadly. "Yore pa home?"

"Hello, Mr. Flipp. Yes, sir, he's here. Won't you come in?"

"Nup. Obliged. Tell yore pa to come out here. I got somethin' fer him."

When Andy came out and greeted the lank caller, he found himself promptly faced with a very delicate situation.

"I noticed yestiddy," said Mr. Flipp, "that you didn't have no dog. That's bad, Mr. Ives. You got to have a dog in these parts; so I've brung you this here pup of Jessie Bell's. He's got a nose like his mammy, an' she's the best dang' trailer in this country."

"Well!" he said. Andy Ives was no man to resort to deception, but he must be tactful and strive with all his diplomacy against becoming owner of Jessie Bell's pup. "Well, Mr. Flipp, this is certainly thoughtful and generous of you, but—"

"Aw, it ain't nothin'. I got to thinkin' 'bout it las' night, an' I says to ol' man Eliot, I says: 'Them Ives ain't got no dog. Thundera-tion, they got to have a dog!' An' the more I thought 'bout it, the sorrier I felt fer you all; an' finally I made up my mind to bring you this pup here. His name's Bugler, 'cause he's got a clear, high-rollin' voice that rings through the woods like ol' Gabriel's horn."

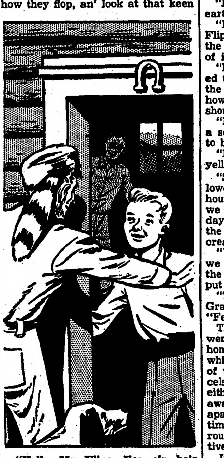
Andy tried to look pleased. He knew that Dave had at first turned away to avoid letting Mr. Flipp see how near he was to laughter; then, a moment later, he saw Dave making for the house. By now, the women knew what was going on out here, and they were probably peering through the window at him and giggling over his predicament. He looked at the pup, which was lying down, nipping fleas on his mange-splotched underside.

"Now, Mr. Flipp," Andy said earnestly, "I just wouldn't think of taking your best pup, maybe your only pup. You'll need—"

"I got sev'ul," Mr. Flipp broke in. "Don't you bother 'bout that a-tall. I can afford to give you Bugler, an' it's a real pleasure to do it."

"But—"

"He's goin' to be good on ev-er'thing that leaves tracks," Mr. Flipp declared. "Look at them ears, how they flop, an' look at that keen nose, an' them knowin' eyes. Mr. Ives, you couldn't do better in the houn' line, I don't care whur you tried. This pup's goin' to have varmint sense, I tell you."



"Hello, Mr. Flipp. Yes, sir, he's here. Won't you come in?"

"No, I just won't take him. I don't intend to come out here and start in by getting obligated to people. Dave and I won't have time for hunting, and we really won't need the dog. But I do appreciate the offer."

Mr. Flipp smiled sadly. "You won't be beholden to me. Not one smidgin! As fer not huntin', I bet you change that tune 'fore long. It ain't good fer men to work all the time; besides, a little meat on the table now an' then he'ps out a lot." He drew from the capacious pocket of his khaki coat a roll of bailing wire and a leather strap with a buckle on it. "He'd gnaw a rope in two, so I brung wire to tie him up with. He'll howl a little the first day or two, but after you feed him a few meals he'll stop that. We'll tie him to the corner of the house, so he can git under it at night."

"No," Andy begged as Mr. Flipp squatted and buckled the collar about Bugler's thin neck. "I don't want the pup. Honest, Mr. Flipp, I'd much rather—"

But the hunter-trapper waved a slender, horny hand for silence. "Nup, it's settled, Mr. Ives. Bugler's yore pup now."

A Lonely Hound Away From Home

Mr. Flipp straightened up from tying Bugler to the house corner. "If his mange don't git better in a weak or two," he advised, "smear some sulphur an' lard or some ol' burnt cylinder oil on the red places."

Andy nodded. "I'll doctor him up. And thanks a lot for your kindness. Won't you come in? We'll be having supper before long."

"Obliged," said Mr. Flipp. "Ain't hungry. I et a bait of goobers 'bout a hour ago. I'll git on home now. Ol' man Eliot ought to be comin' in from the lake pretty soon."

"The lake? Is there a lake near here?"

"Hidden Lake, where he's got his gill nets. It's 'bout a mile. Well, I got to be goin'. If Bugler howls to-night, jest take a scantlin' to him."

Mr. Flipp picked up his rifle and started away, then stopped and turned back. "Say, the deer season opens tomorrow, an' there'll be lots of hunters an' houn's in the woods out here. You goin' to post yore land?"

"Well, I hadn't thought about it," Andy replied. "Do the other homesteaders have their places posted?"

"Most of 'em do, an' it makes trouble. Unless you've got a good reason fer postin', you'll git along better with the county officers an' their frien's by not postin'. Course, I ain't tryin' to tell you how to run yore business, though."

Mr. Flipp then resumed his way home.

Andy went into the house. "Well," he announced, "we've got a hound dog!"

"We'll get you a hunting horn for Christmas," Kate said dryly. "Andrew Ives, the possum king!"

"Or the coon tycoon of Backyonder Swamp!" Hope added.

"I tried my best not to let him give me the dog!" Andy protested.

"Maybe we'll need the hound," Granny put in. "What's his name?"

"Bugler," Andy told her. "Named that because he has a high-rollin' voice, and—"

But at that moment a low, sad sound rose upon the air, a dismal wailing that came from a broken heart and a lonely soul.

"Mercy!" Kate cried. "What on earth is that?"

"It's Bugler," Andy told her. "Mr. Flipp said he might howl a little the first day or two. Think nothing of it."

"How do you stop—?" Hope started to ask, but was drowned out by the beginning of another wailing howl. "How do you stop him?" she shouted.

"Mr. Flipp told me to take a scantlin' to him, but—but I hate to beat the poor thing."

"Feed him something," Granny yelled shrilly.

"Stop screaming!" Kate begged, lowering her own voice as the hound's howl subsided. "Goodness, we can't put up with that for two days! Dave, get those scraps off the kitchen table and feed the poor creature."

"Yes'm." Dave started out. "If we had the muffler that's not on the Webster pickup truck, we could put it on Bugler."

"This is no time for humor," Granny said, her eyes twinkling. "Feed him quick!"

The cold scraps helped, but they were not enough to combat Bugler's homesickness. Nor was the barrel, which Dave rolled under the corner of the house and padded with excelsior for a bed, quite enough either. It was Bugler's first night away from home, his first night apart from his mother; and several times throughout that long night he roused the Iveses with weird, plaintive expressions of grief.

Just before dawn the lights of a car cut through the darkness and found the cabin. Before Andy could get his pants on, the car was stopping in front of the house and men were getting out. They were talking loudly, and not altogether pleasantly. One fellow yelled, "Hey, in there!"

Andy went to the door and opened it, stood blinking in the brilliant light that flooded the front of the house. "Who is it?" he called.

Andy Meets Up With His Enemies

"You got in the wrong house, didn't you, fellow?" a tall man asked, stepping in front of two others who had emerged from the car first. "This is our camping place."

"Who are you?" Andy asked loudly, raising his voice above Bugler's roaring barks at the strangers. "I live here."

"Oh, you do, do you?" said the tall fellow, whose features Andy couldn't make out, for his back was to the lights. "He lives here, boys. Heck of a note, ain't it?"

"I moved here just this week," Andy told him. "I've homesteaded this section of the woods. Are you deer hunters?"

"Sure, and we've camped here every season for the past five years. We've just driven down from Hamilton to join Sheriff Martin's party. Where are they?"

"I don't know anything about them," Andy said.

A short, heavy man moved ahead of the tall one who had been spokesman. "Why don't you donators take up land somewhere else and let our deer-hunting territory alone? You're a blasted nuisance, coming out here and spoiling—"

Andy stepped out the door. "There are ladies in the house," he said quietly. "Stop your ugly talk."

"Why, you peckerwood!" the heavy-set fellow roared. "You bushwhacking peckerwood, I'll—" He started forward, lurching unsteadily, but the tall one caught him by the shoulder.

'Save it," he advised. "Let's drive to Newcastle and find out where the sheriff's camp is this season."

"Turn me loose!" bellowed the burly intruder. "I'll mash his face in. I'll—"

"Turn him loose," Andy said. "We'll both do some mashing. This is my home now, and I don't intend to let a drunk run me away from it."

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

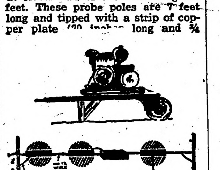
By JIM RHODY

Electric Seine

An expanded version of an electric seine used on smaller trout streams in the East is paying dividends for the Kentucky division of game and fish.

The seine used by the Kentucky division was constructed by Leonard Joeris, division technician, and is a variation of one described by John T. Funk of the Missouri conservation commission.

Joeris' seine consists of a two-strand rubber-coated cable of No. 12 wire, 150 feet long. The first 50 feet of the cable form a lead wire from the generator. A probe pole is securely attached to the cable at either end of the remaining 100 feet. These probe poles are 7 feet long and tipped with a strip of copper plate (20 inches long and ¾ inches wide) folded over the lower end. The seine between the poles is held up by 14 floats made from 18-inch sections of 2x4-inch lumber. Twenty-seven additional electrodes are spaced at 3½-foot intervals between the two probes.



Shown in the top drawing is the generator used in powering the electric seine, and, below, details of the seine's construction.

The power plant, or generator, is an alternating current type, belt-driven, and develops 6½ horsepower at 2,400 rpm's. This generator is larger and more powerful than most generators in use for electric seines or shockers throughout the United States at the present time.

The seine works very well in relatively clear water less than four feet deep. The seine shocks all species of fish equally well, but the large fish seem to be shocked more successfully than the fingerlings and fry. If the seine is moved slowly, little danger of killing fish is apparent. All species of fish recover rapidly and sustain no damage.

This writer saw Joeris and fellow workers of the Kentucky division use the seine in Elkhorn creek, near Frankfort, Ky., and can testify to its effectiveness. However, Joeris, who apparently is a perfectionist, says "no attempt has been made . . . to evaluate the sucess of the seine in various types and conditions of water because sufficient reliable data has never been collected.

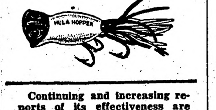
Action Packed



Continuing and increasing reports of its effectiveness are proving that Fred Arbogast & Company's famed topwater lure, the "Hula Popper," is really making fishing history. The impressive voluntary testimonials from enthusiastic anglers demonstrate, as nothing else could, just how deadly the "popper" is in angling for bass. A killer, especially for big bass, the "popper" obeys the slightest wrist command. It can be made to pop, plunk, twitch or jerk at will, or to make plenty of noise and confusion on the surface. Two North Carolina fishermen, Ed Howell and W. G. Hood, Jr., of Goldsboro, claim that "if bass don't strike it, they 'aint' there." The Hula Popper floats when at rest and the small hula skirt goes into action, imitating a live bug. It seems to make bass fighting mad. The Arbogast company also makes the "popper" in fly-rod size, and it, too, is bringing in the bass.

Watch It!

Wisconsin conservation wardens are blaming the Chinese for some undersized trout found in fishermen's creels. It seems the Chinese, in placing rulers on trout creels, are something less than particular about the accuracy of the rulers. As a result, some of the creel rulers are from three fourths to five-eights of an inch short on the seven-inch length. The wardens concede that the fishermen bought these creels in good faith.

Smile Awhile

It was during Franklin D. Roosevelt's third term that a grammar-school pupil was asked how he was getting along with his studies. He explained that he studied just hard enough to get passing grades.

"Oh, that will never do," said his shocked aunt, "don't you know that if you don't study very hard you will never grow up to be President of the United States?"

"I don't expect to, anyway," replied the lad with complete lack of ambition, "I'm a Republican."

An Englishman was sent by his company to investigate the possibilities of drilling oil wells in the wilds of Venezuela. He had been there a few days and had become quite chummy with a man who spoke English well. He was uncertain, however, of the man's nationality. He might have been an American or he might have been a Venezuelan who had learned English.

One day the Englishman asked the man, "Are you a foreigner here, too?"

The fellow gazed at him indignantly. "Foreigner?" he demanded wrathfully. "No! I'm an American."

An American general, attending an official dinner in London, found himself seated next to a Chinese. Figuring the man knew little or no English, he avoided speaking to him and gave all his attention to the man on his right. He felt, though, that he should give the Chinese some attention so after the soup plates had been removed he turned to the Chinese and asked, "Likee soupee?" The man seemed startled at first but smiled and nodded his head. Nothing more was said.

After dessert and coffee the general suddenly became aware of the fact that his Chinese neighbor was standing and speaking brilliantly in perfect English. The American general fidgeted most uncomfortably for the full ten-minute speech.

As he sat down, Dr. Wellington Koo, the Chinese Ambassador and a graduate of Columbia University and Oxford, turned to the general and asked with a justifiable amount of sarcasm, "Likee speechee?"

Mosquito Net Saves Two From Charging Elephant

LONDON.—An elephant stampede was described in Salisbury by Capt. and Mrs. Bertie Celliers, Rhodesian hunters. They came upon tracks of elephants which natives said had been wrecking their huts.

The couple camped at night atop a high knoll and hung their double mosquito net from a tree. Thinking they were safe, they left their rifles 30 yards away. Awakened at dawn by a bull elephant heading straight toward them, they fled.

They saw the animal tear their net from the tree with his trunk. It got entangled in his tusks and swung over his head.

Terrified, he rushed back to his herd, but his ghostly appearance so scared them that they crashed away in panic. The faster he ran the faster they fled. They ran 18 miles.

JOCHIM ROCK PICKER

There has been a great need for the Rock Picker which is proving highly effective in rock infested areas. The Rock Picker is pulled by tractor and controlled hydraulically. Hydraulic pump is optional depending upon the tractor used. The heavy, steel tines, 26 in number, cover an 8 foot swath gathering rocks and depositing them into a 3,000 pound capacity hopper in the rear which dumps by lever release. The machine picks rocks from 3 inches in diameter to more than 250 pounds in weight. The depth control bar is adjusted by turnbuckles. A small tractor can draw the machine.

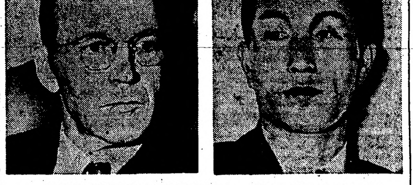
Atlantic Pact Called War-Breeder; Truman Decries Economic 'Gloom'; Committee Slashes Funds for ERP

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



TOKYO ROSE TRIAL FIGURES . . . These figures gave the trial of Tokyo Rose, accused of treason, a new angle when Mark L. Streeter (left) declared that Shigetsugu Tsuneishi (shown at right) was guilty of war atrocities. Tsuneishi, a prosecution witness, assertedly commanded a prison camp on the outskirts of Tokyo where Streeter was a prisoner.

PEACE PACT:

Avenue to War?

As he did in the Taft-Hartley repeal fight, Sen. Robert Taft (R., Ohio) would lead the opposition to senate ratification of the Atlantic pact. That is the treaty in which America joins its western allies in an agreement that an attack on any signatory is an attack upon all—and that a signatory nation may take any reprisal steps it deems fit.

IN HIS SPEECH to the senate, Taft declared the pact was "inextricably linked" to the rearming of Europe, insisted this would lead to an armament race and pointed out that "armament races lead to war."

Thus did a highly effective senator most coherently raise the question of whether the pact really means peace or war. Taft was not without support in his conception of the pact's potentialities. Five senators jumped to their feet to applaud his remarks, and some 12 or 15 senators were applauding at the end.

This was construed by some observers as indicating the extent of the opposition.

Taft was not wholly against the pact, despite his ringing denunciation. He asserted that, even now, he would be willing to change his mind if a reservation could be incorporated into ratification making plain that the treaty did not bind America to furnish arms.

Said Taft: "There is no question that the arms program and the treaty were negotiated together. There is no question in my mind that foreign nations which signed the treaty regarded the providing of arms as an essential part of it . . . If we ratify the pact and fail to furnish the military aid, I believe we will at once be accused of repudiation, and the pact will be completely discredited."

ERP FUNDS:

Slash Voted

There appeared to be a change of sentiment regarding aid to Marshall plan countries. The senate appropriations committee had voted to slash 10 per cent from second-year funds asked for the activity.

The committee also tied up 50 million dollars of what was left in order to cut Spain in on the European recovery program should the administration see fit. The program would get something more than 3.75 billions. President Truman had asked approximately 4.20 billions. A committee member disclosed that one group within the membership had attempted to chop 19 per cent off the requested appropriation.

Chairman McKeller (D., Tenn.) estimated that the committee cut approximately 749 million dollars from President Truman's budget estimates for actual appropriations in foreign spending, which includes other programs besides the Marshall plan.

The sum voted for the Marshall plan would be spread over the 12 months ending June 30, 1950. This was nearly 210 million more than the house had voted—but the house bill would have permitted expenditure of the fund in 10½ months if necessary.

A committee aide explained to Washington newsmen that unless the loan is made to Spain, the withheld 50 million dollars could not be used for any other purpose.

Wrong Job?

You may be happy in your work and pleased with your occupational niche, but the fellow at the desk or machine next to you may not be.

It is the opinion of Robert C. Woellner, Chicago university professor, that at least half of all adults definitely are misplaced, or could have been better placed if modern vocational methods had been available during their formative years.

Woellner attributes much of the present social unrest, high divorce rate, and high incidence of mental illness in the United States to the many unfortunate occupational choices of its workers.

U.S. ECONOMY:

Truman Concedes

While there was some measure of contradiction in concept, President Truman, in his message to congress on the economic state of the nation had conceded that recession forces were alive.

However, in a neat bit of linguistic maneuvering, he declared the current situation one in which the national economy was in orderly retreat from a serious inflation. At the same time, however paradoxical the warning might seem, he declared that there could be no "greater economic folly" than an attempt to balance the federal budget in a "declining national economy."

He highlighted the contradiction by adding that such a move would only aggravate the recession forces against which his new policy was directed.

OF CHIEF INTEREST in his report was his abandonment of an earlier plan to demand four billion dollars in additional taxes. He lightly dismissed this former policy with the statement: "No major increase in taxes should be undertaken at this time." Instead, he proposed liberalization of allowances for past losses in computing income taxes and increasing estate and gift taxes.

The President's obvious reversal of policy was held to be little less pronounced than the findings of his council of economic advisors on whose report the President's message was based. They found that since January the forces threatening stability had become predominantly deflationary and that the weakening of markets had become general.

KRUG:

A Denial

Drew Pearson was in hot water again. Generally accused of partial responsibility in the suicidal death of former defense secretary James Forrestal, the newspaper and radio columnist had reported the U. S. interior secretary Krug was very ill with "athlete's heart."

In a letter to Pearson, Krug's physician, Dr. R. Layman Sexton, asserted Krug is completely well and able to do twice the work of the average person.

Wherever one stood on the propriety of Pearson's discussion of the health of top government officials, it would be remembered that several of his reports on the condition of Forrestal's health—originally denied by the navy—were later admitted.

RENT CONTROLS

Average 9,300 Units Being Freed Daily

According to recent dispatches out of Washington, rental dwellings have been coming off the control list at an average rate of 9,300 a day since the new rent law went into operation on April first.

Rent officials said, however, that few of the decontrol actions had affected any large metropolitan areas, and that some 14 million units still remained under the controls as amended by the new federal law.

As of June 30, these officials added, 551 defense rental areas, so designated in wartime, were completely or partly covered by controls in 1,047 counties with a population in excess of 95 million people. But if the current rate of decontrol continued during the year, it would delight critics.

Deep-Rooted Legumes Keep Soil "at Home," Curb Erosion Losses

CHICAGO — Thick-growing legumes and grasses are good "policemen" for protecting your land from the soil-robbing attacks of erosion, according to the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

That's particularly true if your land has been overcropped with corn or other soil-depleting row crops. And the longer the legume-grass sod is kept in the rotation, the more topsoil is saved.

C. A. Van Doren, University of Illinois soil conservationist, reports that soil losses from corn averaged 14 tons a year in a 3-year rotation. He says that a 6-year rotation of corn, grain and 4 years of meadow would cut the loss to only 3 tons per acre. That means a saving of 11 tons of topsoil a year.

Well-fertilized legumes and grasses nail down the topsoil and keep it in place. They keep soil pores open. They add organic matter that improves drainage, tilth and soil structure. The topgrowth slows rain down to a walk. More water is held in the ground instead of washing away. Thus you save not only topsoil and moisture, but plant food and organic matter.

Good nutrition is essential in getting thick stands of legumes with strong root systems. Many soils need lime to grow good legume crops. A soil test will tell the land's need for lime. Remember, too, that legumes are heavy eaters of phosphate and potash. To give them a full dinner bucket, you need to add fertilizers carrying plenty of these nutrients.

Bigger Dairy Profits

Good hay and pasture are the key to cutting dairy production costs and boosting profits, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out. Pasture is the cheapest source of high-protein feed. Keeping pasture and hay fields at high production levels depends on liming where needed, the use of mixed fertilizer and returning manure and crop residues to the soil.

Organic Matter and Fertilizer Are Top Crop Building Team

CHICAGO—Organic matter gives farm soil the "get up and go" to produce bigger yields and higher quality crops, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out.

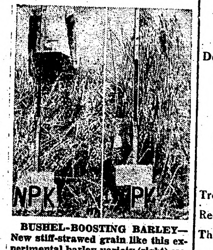
As organic matter rots, it releases elements needed for feeding crops. During the decomposition process, favorable conditions are produced for making available the plant nutrients contained in soil minerals, says a statement issued by the committee.

But organic matter alone cannot do the whole job of giving you big yields and high quality crops, the statement adds. It needs to be reinforced by commercial fertilizer.

Prof. Emil Truog, University of Wisconsin agronomist, recently declared: "To say—as does the organic school—that chemical fertilizer such as phosphate and potash should not be used—is pure bunkum. These fertilizers are needed to make up the inevitable lack of nutritive elements which organic matter alone cannot supply."

Prof. Truog says that in gardens and other small areas, you can maintain the fertility and organic matter supply by the use of composts and animal manures. But he emphasizes that such practices are not feasible for large farm acreages. It is impossible, he says, to prepare and apply the enormous amounts of compost that would be needed for the average farm.

On such big farm acreages, a good crop rotation will provide the needed organic matter. This can be supplied in the form of plowed-under deep-rooted legumes, crop residues, stubble, stalks and roots and barnyard manure. Prof. Truog says all that is necessary to make the system work is the proper use of lime and fertilizers containing phosphorus and potash and sometimes nitrogen. The key to the organic matter and nitrogen problem, he adds, is high lime and mineral fertility. This assures a thick, luxuriant stand of superior deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and the clovers.



BUSHEL-BOOSTING BARLEY—New stiff-strawed grain like this experimental barley variety (right) can take heavier amounts of plant food without lodging. Its "ramrod" stiff straw will support all the weight of heavy, fully-developed, bushel-building heads. Straw of variety at left is too weak to hold up heads of well-fertilized barley crop. Straw broke down and barley lodged, resulting in much lower crop yield. Clinton, Benton and Eaton oats are new varieties that "take" heavier amounts of plant food and yield more bushels per acre.

Tomato Juice

A five-ounce glass of tomato juice gives an adult about one-third of the vitamin C he needs for a day. A half-cup serving of canned tomatoes will supply about the same amount. Tomatoes are about one-half as rich in ascorbic acid as are oranges. The vitamin keeps well in both foods because they are acid before they are digested.

For The Ladies: A Diet That Really Works

We went out visiting the other night and the ladies were talking away about weight-reducing diets. One of them had a special "15-day Hollywood diet" guaranteed to slim her down fifteen pounds' worth. Another was living on bananas and skim milk!

I might have known the missus would get the bug, too, and sure enough the other day she asks me, "Joe, what kind of a diet do you think I ought to go on?"

"Mother," I says, "the only diet I would ever recommend to anyone is simply moderation. I wouldn't trust any of those get-thin-quick diets. Simply cut down on desserts, bread, butter, sweets and fats—but when you do, even do your cutting down moderately."

From where I sit, moderation is the watchword. Moderation with food, with smoking or with the enjoyment of a friendly glass of temperate beer or ale. Actually, moderation adds to the enjoyment of just about anything.

History's most terrific explosion was in 1883, when the Indonesian volcanic island Krakatao blew up and vanished. Stone, dust and ashes rocketed 17 miles into the sky. Fifty-foot waves drowned 36,000 as they roared through the archipelago's thousands of islands.

Tips on Making Pie Crust

Fresh fruit and berry pies, warm from the oven, are hard to surpass for goodness when the crust has that melt-in-your-mouth quality.

Ina Rowe of the University of Minnesota recommends using ½ cup lard, ½ teaspoon salt and 1½ cups flour blending these ingredients into coarse chunks. Instead of using water, add 3 to 4 tablespoonsful of milk or enough to blend into a ball. When milk is used, the crust will brown better.

A richer, more tender-looking crust is obtained if the top is brushed with heavy cream just before baking, Miss Rowe says.

Thorough baking is essential to a crisp crust. If the the pie is baked in glass it is easy to see if the bottom crust is done.

Deep-Rooted Legumes Keep Soil "at Home," Curb Erosion Losses

CHICAGO — Thick-growing legumes and grasses are good "policemen" for protecting your land from the soil-robbing attacks of erosion, according to the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

That's particularly true if your land has been overcropped with corn or other soil-depleting row crops. And the longer the legume-grass sod is kept in the rotation, the more topsoil is saved.

C. A. Van Doren, University of Illinois soil conservationist, reports that soil losses from corn averaged 14 tons a year in a 3-year rotation. He says that a 6-year rotation of corn, grain and 4 years of meadow would cut the loss to only 3 tons per acre. That means a saving of 11 tons of topsoil a year.

Well-fertilized legumes and grasses nail down the topsoil and keep it in place. They keep soil pores open. They add organic matter that improves drainage, tilth and soil structure. The topgrowth slows rain down to a walk. More water is held in the ground instead of washing away. Thus you save not only topsoil and moisture, but plant food and organic matter.

Good nutrition is essential in getting thick stands of legumes with strong root systems. Many soils need lime to grow good legume crops. A soil test will tell the land's need for lime. Remember, too, that legumes are heavy eaters of phosphate and potash. To give them a full dinner bucket, you need to add fertilizers carrying plenty of these nutrients.

Bigger Dairy Profits

Good hay and pasture are the key to cutting dairy production costs and boosting profits, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out. Pasture is the cheapest source of high-protein feed. Keeping pasture and hay fields at high production levels depends on liming where needed, the use of mixed fertilizer and returning manure and crop residues to the soil.

Organic Matter and Fertilizer Are Top Crop Building Team

CHICAGO—Organic matter gives farm soil the "get up and go" to produce bigger yields and higher quality crops, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out.

As organic matter rots, it releases elements needed for feeding crops. During the decomposition process, favorable conditions are produced for making available the plant nutrients contained in soil minerals, says a statement issued by the committee.

But organic matter alone cannot do the whole job of giving you big yields and high quality crops, the statement adds. It needs to be reinforced by commercial fertilizer.

Prof. Emil Truog, University of Wisconsin agronomist, recently declared: "To say—as does the organic school—that chemical fertilizer such as phosphate and potash should not be used—is pure bunkum. These fertilizers are needed to make up the inevitable lack of nutritive elements which organic matter alone cannot supply."

Prof. Truog says that in gardens and other small areas, you can maintain the fertility and organic matter supply by the use of composts and animal manures. But he emphasizes that such practices are not feasible for large farm acreages. It is impossible, he says, to prepare and apply the enormous amounts of compost that would be needed for the average farm.

On such big farm acreages, a good crop rotation will provide the needed organic matter. This can be supplied in the form of plowed-under deep-rooted legumes, crop residues, stubble, stalks and roots and barnyard manure. Prof. Truog says all that is necessary to make the system work is the proper use of lime and fertilizers containing phosphorus and potash and sometimes nitrogen. The key to the organic matter and nitrogen problem, he adds, is high lime and mineral fertility. This assures a thick, luxuriant stand of superior deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and the clovers.

BUSHEL-BOOSTING BARLEY—New stiff-strawed grain like this experimental barley variety (right) can take heavier amounts of plant food without lodging. Its "ramrod" stiff straw will support all the weight of heavy, fully-developed, bushel-building heads. Straw of variety at left is too weak to hold up heads of well-fertilized barley crop. Straw broke down and barley lodged, resulting in much lower crop yield. Clinton, Benton and Eaton oats are new varieties that "take" heavier amounts of plant food and yield more bushels per acre.

Tomato Juice

A five-ounce glass of tomato juice gives an adult about one-third of the vitamin C he needs for a day. A half-cup serving of canned tomatoes will supply about the same amount. Tomatoes are about one-half as rich in ascorbic acid as are oranges. The vitamin keeps well in both foods because they are acid before they are digested.

Malay Archipelago

Malay Archipelago, which is the Netherlands East Indies, straddles the equator, forming a barrier between the Pacific and Indian oceans and a link between Asia and Australia. Its total land area is over two and a half times that of Texas—735,268 square miles. Its principal islands are Java, Sumatra and Borneo.

For The Ladies: A Diet That Really Works

We went out visiting the other night and the ladies were talking away about weight-reducing diets. One of them had a special "15-day Hollywood diet" guaranteed to slim her down fifteen pounds' worth. Another was living on bananas and skim milk!

I might have known the missus would get the bug, too, and sure enough the other day she asks me, "Joe, what kind of a diet do you think I ought to go on?"

"Mother," I says, "the only diet I would ever recommend to anyone is simply moderation. I wouldn't trust any of those get-thin-quick diets. Simply cut down on desserts, bread, butter, sweets and fats—but when you do, even do your cutting down moderately."

From where I sit, moderation is the watchword. Moderation with food, with smoking or with the enjoyment of a friendly glass of temperate beer or ale. Actually, moderation adds to the enjoyment of just about anything.

Tips on Making Pie Crust

Fresh fruit and berry pies, warm from the oven, are hard to surpass for goodness when the crust has that melt-in-your-mouth quality.

Ina Rowe of the University of Minnesota recommends using ½ cup lard, ½ teaspoon salt and 1½ cups flour blending these ingredients into coarse chunks.

Instead of using water, add 3 to 4 tablespoonsful of milk or enough to blend into a ball. When milk is used, the crust will brown better.

A richer, more tender-looking crust is obtained if the top is brushed with heavy cream just before baking, Miss Rowe says.

Thorough baking is essential to a crisp crust. If the the pie is baked in glass it is easy to see if the bottom crust is done.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

Andy Ives and his family, wife Kate, daughter Hope, son Dave and mother-in-law, Granny, give up their comfortable home to go modern pioneering in southern Arkansas where Andy receives free land in return for working there as least two years, clearing the swampland for productive planting. The family is greeted by neighbors, including Emerson Eliot and his sidekick, Absalom Flipp, who immediately makes Andy a present of a puppy. Harley and Birdie Webster also call and speak of their daughter, Oreen, who is about Dave's age. The Ives are disturbed in their sleep one night by hunters who previously used the Ives' home as their quarters.

CHAPTER VII

"Not drunk," the bully growled. He turned and moved unsteadily back to the car. "Come on, boys. Let's go to Newcastle. I want to see Sig Flanagan. I wonder how he feels about losing the camp house out here."

The third member of the group was a slender man of about fifty. He wore horn-rimmed glasses, which gave his already serious face an even more serious look. He was thin-lipped, narrow of face, and he carried himself with more dignity than the other two had shown.

"I'm David Wellons," he said to Andy, "county attorney over at Hamilton." He bowed in a way that could have been interpreted as either courteous or sardonic. "We regret having disturbed your rest, Mr.—er—"

"Ives," Andy told him. Andy Ives. Glad to meet you, Mr. Wellons."

"Ah, Mr. Ives. A pleasure, I'm sure. Where are you from?"

"Harbisonville."

"Have you ever lived in this country?"

"Not till now," Andy answered. He wondered if the man's interest and politeness were feigned or earnest. "Why do you ask?"

"Partly from curiosity. It will be quite an experience for you, living here, I'm sure. Quite an experience!" Then he turned back to the car. "Come, gentlemen. We're wasting time."

They drove away, toward the gravel road that led out to the highway. Andy stood for a moment under the clear, late stars, watching the red taillight blink through the trees and thickets the car passed. It was like the baleful red eye of a temporarily vanquished enemy in retreat, looking back at him.

When he went into the kitchen, Dave was sound asleep. But, beyond the wall, the women were awake. Kate called: "Who was it, Andy? Wasn't one of them mad about something?"

"We've got their camping place," Andy told her. "They're deer hunters."

"Oh!"

Andy returned to the bed, rolled Dave out of the way, and crawled in. But he didn't go to sleep; there was too much to think about.

Bugler howled again and took his mind off the matter.

While they were at breakfast, they heard hounds trailing in the distance, then the dull roar of a gun. Some hunter had killed a deer.

Andy and Dave went to Newcastle that morning. Andy sold the car and bought a pair of medium-sized mules, which appeared to be well broken and in good condition. He bought a secondhand wagon and harness for the mules. He bought two turning plows, another ax, a crosscut saw, a mattock, some barbed wire and a few other items.

The hardware merchant serving him was very pleasant, as well he should have been, for Andy was a good customer, even if he did seem to know a lot about prices. "You're new in our section, aren't you?" he asked. "Haven't seen you before."

"Just moved down here," Andy told him. "I'm homesteading out west of town."

"Oh, I see," the merchant said slowly, studying Andy with interest. "You seem to know a lot about hardware."

Andy laughed softly. "I've spent a good many years selling it for Jaynes' Hardware, up at Harbisonville. I ought to know hardware."

"I know Mr. Jaynes," the merchant said. "I'm Watson Bird."

"I'm Andy Ives, and this is my boy, Dave."

"Glad to meet you, Mr. Ives." He looked around to see that no other customers were within hearing. "Well, let me give you a little hint, even though you haven't asked for it: Be careful out there where you've homesteaded. Be very careful about everything."

Mules Replace Andy's Automobile

"I always try to be careful," Andy told him. "What's on your mind?"

"In the first place, you're not like the general run of the homesteaders, and that may put you in bad with them. In the second place, all the homesteaders are rather disliked by the people in Newcastle, especially a certain element here."

"I think I know the ones you mean," Andy said. "I've heard some things."

"Good! Then you'll watch out, Ives." He looked at Dave. "Fine youngster you have there. You be careful too, about picking your friends, Dave; there are some pretty tough customers out in your neighborhood."

"Yes, sir," Dave promised.

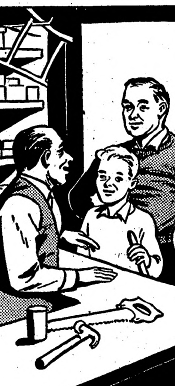
And as they were leaving, the merchant said to Andy: "If you happen to need any credit, come to me, Ives. I like your cut."

"Thank you, Mr. Bird," Andy said gratefully. "But I hope to keep things on a cash basis. Credit scares me; it gets out of hand sometimes."

"You talk like a man who pays his debts," Mr. Bird said, pleased. "And remember, my offer stands."

As they drove homeward in the rattling wagon, loaded with their purchases, which included also feed for the mules and provisions for the kitchen, Andy and Dave felt that this was really the beginning. In a sense, the car had been their last remaining link with town life, and now it was gone and they were being pulled homeward by mules. They rode in silence for about two miles, each sensing the thoughts of the other. Andy spoke first.

"Well, son, this is it! We're now a pair of farmers, but someday we'll have a nice new car and we'll go places and see things. Someday—"



"You talk like a man who pays his debts. And remember, my offer stands."

"Sure we will!" Dave agreed. "We'll have a better car than the one you sold. Right now, we've so much to do that we don't need a car."

Andy nodded. A lump came into his throat, for he was moved by the boy's acceptance of the situation. After all, this was none of Dave's doing; lots of kids would hold it against a father if he tore them loose from comfort and friends and saddled them with a lot of hard work. It warmed his heart when Dave showed that he was different, that he felt this was his own venture too.

"I like to hear you talk like that," he said simply. "Whatever comes, you'll always know I did what I thought was best, son."

"Yessir, I know you did," Dave said.

They rode on in silence. They understood each other.

When they turned off the highway onto the gravel road and drew near the fork of woods road that led out to the cabin, they heard hounds out ahead of them. It sounded like a larger pack on a hot chase.

"Not far from our place," Dave guessed.

The deer are having a hard day," said Andy. "Poor critters!"

Trouble Rears Its Ugly Head

"Gosh!" Dave exclaimed. "I'd like to see a deer in the woods. Only deer I've seen were in the zoo. They didn't look happy."

A heavy-gauge gun "bulloomed!" then, but the hounds continued their chase, going southeast.

"He missed," said Andy. "That shot sounded pretty close to our house."

As they drew up in front of the house, though, the pup changed abruptly and opened up with a long-drawn, dismal howling, pointing his keen muzzle heavenward and pouring the entire vicinity full of heart-rending wails.

The door opened and Kate appeared, very straight, very white, very angry. Through the open door they could hear someone playing chords on the piano, accompanied by the unsure notes of a violin determinedly attempting "The Flight of the Bumblebee."

Andy's eyes were on Kate's white face. Something was wrong! He had never seen her look quite so grim.

"What's the matter, honey?" he called. "Come on out and look at the team and the things we've bought."

Kate came out, walked fast toward the wagon. Granny, looking equally angry, replaced her in the doorway.

The bumblebee flew on and on, wavering often.

"You heard the shot," Kate said. "You heard the hounds and the shot, didn't you?"

"Sure. What about it?" Her manner sent Andy's heart pounding, yet he knew that no one had been injured by the shot, or else the music wouldn't be going on in the house. "What's the matter, Kate?"

"The hounds chased the deer right by the house. A man rode out of the woods, trying to head off the deer. He shot from the horse. Most of the load struck the west end of the cabin. Buckshot, of course."

Andy paled now. "Who was it? Did he stop and apologize? Did Mr. Eliot know him?"

"Mr. Eliot was busy with his violin, trying to show Hope how to accompany him. He didn't even see the hunter—a big, broad man on a rangy black horse. No, he didn't stop. He went on by at a gallop, loading his gun as he went. Didn't even look this way!"

"He shot mighty high," Andy said slowly, thinking hard. "Funny he'd miss the deer and shoot the cabin wall, from horseback. High as he was above the deer, the charge should've gone into the ground."

"I don't think he shot at the deer," Granny said, coming down the low step from the cabin door. "Does are protected, aren't they?"

Andy nodded. "Was it a doe?"

"It was small, and it had no antlers. I think that when the man saw it was a doe, he was mad about that; and it was right here at the house too, and that was a sore subject with him—so, he just shot at the house for pure meanness!"

"Sounds logical," Andy agreed, "but it would take a mighty mean fellow to pull such a trick!"

"It was Sig Flanagan," a voice said quitely. "I seen him."

They turned quickly and saw Mr. Flipp, who had come silently out of the woods, two fox squirrels swinging from his rawhide belt, his rifle on his narrow shoulder.

"Did you see him shoot?" Andy asked.

"Nup. Seen him ridin' to head off the doe, which he may not've knowed was a doe." He set the rifle down against a tree and came on toward the wagon.

"Shet up, Bugler!" he roared. Flanagan's that mean, all right. It'd be just like him to pour a load of shot into yore house an' then say he was shootin' at the deer."

"Where is he camped?" Andy asked, climbing down from the wagon.

"He always camps with the sheriff an' that bunch," Mr. Flipp told him. "Shet up, Bugler! Say, if that wasn't yore dog, I'd grab me up a scantlin' an' bust him!" He looked dolefully at Kate and Granny.

"'Scuse me, ladies, but derned if I don't hate to hear a critter howl!"

"It's the music," said Granny. "Bugler has done pretty well today, but the music—"

Andy Is Determined To See Flanagan

"Yes'm, I know." Absalom Flipp looked from one to the other apologetically. "Ol' man Eliot's been jest itchin' to git over here an' play his fiddle with the piano. He can't play with a dang, though, an' that flyin' dirt-dobber piece—or whatever he calls it—is one of his wust ones! He took fiddlin' oncet, he says, in one of them observatories, but—"

"A conservatory," Granny corrected him.

"Yes'm, that's whut I said."

"I'm going to Sheriff Martin's camp," Andy declared. "I'm going to tell Sig Flanagan—"

"Jest a minute," Mr. Flipp interrupted. "You ain't asked my advice, but lemme give you a slug of it: Forget whut happened. That's the best and easiest way to handle it."

"Yes," said Kate, "I'd rather you would, Andy. They'd all be even angrier if you went to the camp and tried to lay down the law to them. Flanagan will say that it was an accident, anyway."

"They can't ride through my place, shooting at my house," Andy cut in hotly. "If they get by with this, they might try worse next time. I'm going."

The music stopped. Hope came out, Mr. Eliot following. A look of deep peace lay upon his roundish face, and his eyes twinkled with joy behind his spectacles.

"Where is the sheriff camped?" Andy asked Mr. Flipp.

"'Bout a mile southwest of here, on the other side of the bayou. But, look, Mr. Ives. You won't do nothin' but harm to go there. As fer the postin' of yore land, they'd say you had to have a notice in the county paper 'fore you could make it stick, anyhow. Why, they's lawyers an' county officers an' the game warden an' the sheriff—they're all together there. Whut chance would you have, givin' orders to that bunch?"

"They'll have to know how I feel about it," Andy said stubbornly. "Flanagan in particular. I'm going. Dave, you can unhitch the mules and put them in the lot. I'll unload the things for the house before I—"

Only One Pair of Eyes

Whether you work frequently at a sewing machine, a typewriter or a machine in a factory, it's important to have the background painted in a color that does not contrast too sharply with the machine itself. Too much contrast requires the constant focusing and refocusing of the eye muscles, bringing on eye fatigue.

Cement Sacks

The paper or cloth sacks in which portland cement is shipped are securely sealed before being filled with cement. They are filled through a small opening in the bottom of the sack which is closed by the weight of the cement inside when the sack has received 94 pounds of cement and is turned right side up.

"Tree of life"

Brazilians call the carnauba the Tree of Life, because it meets almost all their needs. The fronds themselves, for example, are large and their fibers strong and pliable, making them suitable for use in hats, baskets, brooms, nets, cordage, and roofs for houses.

Chlorine in Water

Only a relatively small amount of chlorine is used to treat water, and much of this disappears while it stands in pipes, reservoirs, etc. The amount in the water we drink is so little that our bodies can readily dispose of it without harm.

Quack Grass Control

TCA formulations are on the market commercially for the first time this season. They are being widely used for the control of quack, Bermuda, Johnson and other grasses.

Better Hatch

Recent investigations indicate that soiled hatching eggs that have previously been washed in proper detergent solutions, and held under proper conditions, hatched as well as clean unwashed eggs. Normally, soiled eggs hatch very poorly, so this method of cleaning provides a method of increasing hatchability.

Roosevelt National Park

Theodore Roosevelt national park, in western North Dakota, includes part of Theodore Roosevelt's Elkhorn ranch. Between 1883 and 1886, and occasionally for the next 10 years, the future president devoted time to cattle ranching, hunting and writing in this region.

For Shiny Faucets

When the nickel faucets in your sink become stained, polish them by rubbing with a soft cloth dipped in spirits of ammonia. Wash them off afterward with hot water and soap, and polish with a soft, dry cloth.

Wall Patching

Plaster of Paris is good stuff with which to patch walls; but unless you're nimble, it may get dry and hard before the job is finished. To prevent that, mix a tablespoonful of ordinary flour with every cup of plaster of Paris.

Anchoring Rugs

Small throw rugs that have a tendency to slip along the floor can be anchored by attaching several jar rubbers to the under side, or shellacking the reverse sides.

To Brighten Rug

For a general brightening up of a cloth rug, sprinkle salt all over it, let stand an hour or two, then take it up with the vacuum cleaner.

Rust Stains on Tile

Rust stains on tile usually will yield to kerosene, if they're not too old. Cover the spots with kerosene for a couple of hours then wash the tile with soap and hot water.

Mirror Streaks

If streaks on your mirror show marked signs of stubbornness, they can sometimes be persuaded to go if you rub them with a little oil-type furnish polish.

Avoiding Varnish Bubbles

To avoid surface bubbles when you varnish, don't shake the can; stir the contents gently with a clean stick.

Hint to Waxers

Regardless of what type wax you use, be sure you don't apply too much and that you give the application sufficient buffing. Otherwise, your floor will be quick to show rubber heel marks and furniture scratches.

Drying Out Fresh Plaster

QUESTION: Is there a way of drying out plaster and Keene's cement (in a bathroom) quickly, so that we can paint the walls of new rooms? We were advised to wait three to six months, but we need to hurry this if at all possible.

ANSWER: You can help to some extent with portable stoves, but I would not advise you to apply an oil paint under two months, three to six months will not be necessary. If you wish to cover the walls in a hurry, you can put on a resin-base, water-emulsion paint. This, however, is not intended for either a bathroom or a kitchen, as the surface is not glossy enough. But it may serve your purpose for a couple of months. You then can put on a varnish-size and when dry, apply two coats enamel undercoater and a finish coat of enamel.

Years Catch the Fastest Athlete

By GRANTLAND RICE

Raw Speed

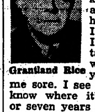
You speak of the speed of Coaltown, or the speed Citation knows.
You speak of the speed of the western gale when the young tornado blows.

But there's only one speed that matters, wherever the simooms rage,
And that is the speed of the flying years that turns youth into age.

What Are Reflexes?

"Just what," writes L. M. P., "are the reflexes you and other sporting experts (thanks) write about? Are they physical or mental? Why should they affect an old-timer more than a younger fellow? Why are they so important? I would think that a veteran would have better reflexes than a younger fellow."

Reflexes are merely team play between mind and muscle. For example years ago, I was talking with Jack Dempsey. Jack was then about through. "I know I'm as strong as I used to be," he said. "I know I can hit as hard. I know I still can take a punch as well. But I'll tell you what makes me sore. I see a punch starting. I know where it's headed for. Six or seven years ago my chin or my head would be out of the way instinctively. But today too many of these punches hit me. Even the sucker punches.



Grantland Rice

"There's another angle," Jack said. "Six or seven years ago when I spotted an opening, my fist swung in that split second. Today when I see an opening it disappears by the time my fist gets in motion. It is either blocked or it has moved out of the way. I don't believe many people know what this means to a fighter. It is only a matter of a split second. Maybe a fifth of a second. But it happens that way as you get older. The message from your eye or your mind travels slower to the muscle. Not much slower. But a fifth of a second means a lot."

There probably never was a better instinctive puncher or fighter than Dempsey when he was at his peak. Or during those days when Dempsey was hungry.

You might think that as you got older the message from eye or mind to muscle would travel faster. It doesn't. As you get older nothing travels faster except the years. The only detail an athlete picks up as he grows older is experience.

When Louis was working, after a fashion, against Joe Walcott, he would stalk the Jersey retreater and catch up with him. Then do nothing. Ten years ago, he would have knocked out Walcott in the first round, for Louis was a fast, hard puncher. But after his 10 or 11 years in the ring, Louis' reflexes were shot. He could see his opening but by the time he had the blow under way, Walcott would be out of reach.

The same thing happens to ballplayers. The hitters can no longer follow the pitch and get the bat working in time. Notice how many veterans are called out on that third strike.

Ted Williams has the best set of reflexes in baseball. Ted can swing a bat on a fith of a second's notice—when the pitch is only 20 or 30 feet away. You don't believe this is true? Ask Bill Dickey, who caught back of Williams for some years.

On Being Hungry

For several weeks inhabitants of various wayside inns around the world have been telling me this story. It concerns Walter (Good Time Charlie) Friedman, Carnera's original importer.

Good Time Charlie's dream is now to locate a seven-foot chinaman or a seven-foot Zulu—one of those who can high jump eight or nine feet. We questioned him about it recently and discovered Good Time Charlie feels that he has the answer to the next heavyweight champion.

"I'd keep him hungry," Charlie says. "I'd get him and starve him. The trouble with fighters today they are too well fed. They have been able to make a good living outside of the ring. They eat too much.

"Jack Dempsey was hungry when he was at his best. Tunney needed money when he forced himself to train for Dempsey. Joe Louis was hungry when he broke in. Willard was hungry when he started after Jack Johnson. Hungry guys are hard to lick.

"That's what's the matter with white fighters today," Good Time Charlie continued. "They are fat and overfed. So they have no ambition. Most of them can make good money without fighting.

"A well-fed man seems to have nothing to fight for."

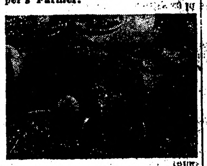
Ice Box Raids Sure With Fruit Punch Handy

You can be sure that the refrigerator and cookie jar will get raided often if you keep frosty fruit punch and crunchy cookies on tap, according to the Country Cooking editor of nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer.



Here is her recipe for a tangy thirst-quenching fruit punch:

MINTED ADE

¾ c. light corn sirup
¾ c. water
6 stalks fresh mint
3 tbsp. lemon juice
2½ c. grapefruit juice
1 c. ginger ale

Boil corn sirup and water together for three minutes. Remove tips from mint stalks and crush the stalks in the hot sirup. Add tips and let stand for 30 minutes; strain. Add lemon juice and grapefruit juice; chill thoroly. Pour over ice in tall glasses. Add ginger ale just before serving. Garnish with mint. Serves six.

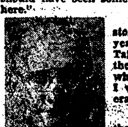
Otter Tales
By Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Some character is always giving me a bad time! Lately it's been that shiftless rounder, Winden Lightnin'. Honest to goodness, some days I think I'd have been better off just stayin' home in bed heatin' an electric blanket!

Seems like this summer has been awfully bad. About the time I get a lot of electric appliances whirrin' in fine shape, the whole sky falls on me. WHA-R-O-O-M . . . BLA-Z-O-O-M . . . C-A-A-R-A-S-H! I'm off again, running like mad, with Old Man Lightnin' screaming after me, knocking out transformers, shooting insulators to bits, and shredding poles into match wood.

Well, one day it was so bad I hardly got out of our Hoot Lake Plant so I got to talking to D. W. Dunlap, the plant superintendent there. "Shucks," says Dunlap, "this isn't so bad. You should have seen some of the troubles we had when I started here."



"When was that?" I asks, sensing a story. "Well," said Dunlap, "that was 35 years ago, because I started with the Otter Tail folks on May 28, 1914. And believe me, there have been a lot of changes made. Why, when I started working here at Hoot Lake I was all alone. We had one wheel generating 900 kilowatts in 24 hours."

Gosh, even I know—without asking—that the Otter Tail Hoot Lake Plant today generates 150,000 kilowatts in 24 hours, and Dunlap is now in charge of an operating force of 33 men. Of course, it takes growth like that to give constantly improving service over 5,603 miles of transmission lines.

And it also takes money. That's the reason the Otter Tail Power Company recently sold $3,000,000 worth of bonds to finance the present program of new construction and expansion. Customers, employees and stockholders—takes lots of each to provide low-cost electric service.

It's just like granddad Eager-Beaver Kilowatt told me one time. "Son," he says, "it takes a lot of pulling together to make any effort a success—from milking a cow to making electricity. For one thing, it takes loyal, industrious employees—men like D. W. Dunlap, who is one of the oldest members of the Otter Tail family."

And Eager-Beaver could have added the names of around 270 other Otter Tail folks, too, who all do their part every day in supplying you with electric living. Read this column next month for an interesting story about some of these folks.

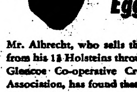
"Land O'Lakes Helps My Market for Milk and Eggs"—says JOHN F. ALBRECHT, Glencoe, Minn., dairyman



Mr. Albrecht, who sells the milk from his 13 Holsteins through the Glencoe Co-operative Creamery Association, has found that "Land O'Lakes helps my egg and dairy market." Land O'Lakes, he points out, brings better returns to farmers by making savings at three levels—processing, distribution and marketing. "With Land O' Lakes out to do the best job for the farmer," he says, "I'm sure of a square deal every time." If you milk cows or raise poultry, market through Land O'Lakes. As farmers will tell you, it pays.

Fishing Rod 'Alarm'

"Alarm rods," fishing rods that ring a bell when the fish bite, have been patented by an Eastern inventor. Equipped with gaff-hooks on their tips to simplify landing of large fish, they have wood handles and metal shafts. The angler has no need to hold the rod after casting. When the fish strikes, a spring releases a liberal length of line for a sporting run.

Story of Apple

Apples have entwined themselves through history, romance and science like the flourishing fruit they are. Who knows if Isaac Newton would have discovered the theory of gravity had it not been for the apple that gave him the idea. And American folklore would have been much the poorer without its delightful story of Johnny Appleseed.

What Einstein Foresaw

Men have always used energy that came directly from the sun, but in 1905 Albert Einstein saw in every speck of dust here on earth a possible source of that same energy. Today, scientists have found the source of the sun's strange and wonderful energy locked in the heart of the atom.

The expression, "hear a pin drop," is derived from the method used in 17th century coffee house auctions, according to Kemper insurance historians. A pin was inserted an inch or so below the wick of a lighted candle. The highest bid when the pin fell secured a ship or other goods for sale.

Vitamin C

Tomatoes, most popular of all home garden vegetables, offer vitamin C generously, especially if they ripen in the sun. Other good vegetables for this vitamin, needed every day for best health, are: cabbage, cauliflower, green peppers and the green leafy vegetables of all kinds—especially if used fresh from the garden and served raw in salads, or quickly cooked in a small quantity of water.

Dining Car

A dining car, fully equipped, carries approximately the following stock, not including food and provisions: 200 tablecloths, 966 napkins, 200 towels, 40 pieces of chinaware, 946 pieces of silverware, 320 pieces of glassware, 200 items of pantry and kitchenware, 80 aprons and 75 waiters' coats.

Universal Drink

Except for water and milk, tea is the most universal of drinks — and one of the cheapest. It is consumed at London tea parties and Japanese ceremonials, by Tibetan monks who serve it with butter, by Arab sheiks who flavor it with mint, and certain Mongol tribes who like it with a touch of salt.

Brood mares with young foals should be fed about like work horses at light work. Pasture is a good source of protein, mineral, and vitamins essential in the brood mare's ration. If pasture is not available, feed alfalfa hay or mixed clover and timothy hay.

Diesel Trains

Many light-weight, Diesel-powered, air-conditioned streamline passenger trains represent an investment of from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 each, depending on size of power unit, length of train and other factors.

Nation of Smokers

More ash trays were being emptied throughout the U. S. last year as the nation's smokers used up 348 billion cigarettes—a 13 billion increase over 1947. Stogie statistics were higher too as 5.8 billion cigars were burned up during the year for an increase of nearly 3 per cent over 1947.

A 20-Year Record

Last year the automobile industry in the United States produced 5,536,000 cars, including trucks. Passenger car sales totaled 3,490,952. Passenger cars produced in March, 1949, totaled 520,000, the highest monthly output for the industry since March, 1929.

Oil Wells

In drilling for oil, man makes his deepest earth penetration without going below the surface himself. Oil flows from two and two-third miles down in a productive well of the Louisiana bayou country.

Truman Signs North Atlantic Pact; Brannan Farm Plan Beaten in House; British Clamor for A-Bomb Secrets

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

ENVOY TO COSTA RICA SWORN IN . . . Joseph Flack (left) of Doylestown, Pa., places his left hand upon the Bible as he takes oath of office and is sworn in as new ambassador to Costa Rica from the United States. He succeeds Nathaniel P. Davis. The wife of the new envoy is looking as Stanley Woodward, chief of protocol officer at the state department in Washington, D. C., administers the oath.

BRANNAN PLAN:

Loses Trial

The house approved a measure continuing the farm price-support program in its present form. The bill was slated to go to the senate. The house vote was 383-25.

The retention of the 90 per cent of parity supports killed the Aiken law, passed by the Republican-controlled 80th congress and which was scheduled to go into effect Jan. 1.

The administration gained a partial victory in eliminating the Aiken law but saw defeat in being denied a test run of the controversial Brannan agricultural plan.

Under the Brannan plan, perishable crops would be allowed to sell at what the market would pay; then the government would pay the farmers the difference between the support level and the average price the farmers got.

The Pace bill, which embodied provisions for a trial run on three farm products of the Brannan plan, lost out, 222-152.

A substitute for the Pace bill, the Gore measure, suspending the Aiken law and continuing the present farm program, won by a final vote 383-25.

One of the surprises of the session was the very few votes cast to keep the Aiken law alive.

Corridors of the house office building where the meeting was held were filled with lobbyists for various farm organizations. Police had the area roped off.

Democratic Leader McCormack (Mass.) argued that opponents of the Pace bill were obligated to offer some kind of alternative.

"I'm concerned about the consumer," he said. "When he reads about millions of bushels of potatoes being burned under the present farm program, he wants to know what's wrong."

WARNING:

Pact Okayed

Russia received a warning that any further aggression in Europe will be considered an attack upon the United States. The warning came in the form of an 82-13 ratification of the Atlantic pact by the senate.

It was the first time in American history that a peacetime pledge had been made that the United States will take action (military action, if necessary) if certain other nations are attacked.

UNDER the north Atlantic treaty this nation and 11 other nations pledge that an attack upon one will be considered an attack upon all. The pact also pledges that the 12 members of the treaty shall prepare for mutual defense before the need for military action actually arises.

A small minority waged bitter opposition to the pact during the 13 days of senate debate upon it. Three Republicans, Wherry of Nebraska, Taft of Ohio and Watkins of Utah, tried to write a reservation into the treaty, specifying that ratification did not impose upon the United States the moral or legal obligation to supply arms to the other 11 signers.

The heavy vote for ratification and the impressive vote against arms reservations were victories for the senate bipartisan foreign policy. Only two Democrats voted against ratification—Johnson of Colorado and Taylor of Idaho, Henry Wallace's running mate in 1948.

President Truman then asked congress for a billion, 450 million dollars to finance an arms-aid program for western Europe after signing the pact.

CRAZY FISH

Searchers after the unique can find the "screwiest" fish acquarium in the world at the University of Toledo, Ohio.

As a by-product of research into means of boosting the stock of fish in the nation's lakes and rivers, Floyd J. Brinley, physiologist, has developed the following:

Thirty-three-eyed brown trout.

Trout with extra transplanted hearts outside their bodies which continue to pulsate after the fish have died.

Trout babies which, in the interest of determining the effect of oxygen on the heart action of fish, live in oxygen "tents."

ATOM DATA:

England's Needs

Reports say the administration has investigated the possibilities of sharing atom-bomb secrets with Britain by executive agreement without action by congress. Some law-makers have sought to tie the President's hands.

The idea has been discussed but no decision has been reached to carry it through. It is considered a matter of the senate-house atomic committee, the state department, the armed services and the atomic energy commission. A secret meeting at Blair House was thought to have been called by Truman to discuss the matter.

The United Kingdom and Canada co-operated in atomic development during the war and are believed to know all about the wartime bomb. The atomic energy law of 1946 has forbidden further exchange of information.

Some sources say Great Britain can produce an atom bomb of its own if it decides to concentrate on the problem.

Britain may have threatened the United States with loss of uranium ore from British-owned Belgian Congo mines if the U.S. refuses to yield atomic secrets.

Britishers have been resentful that their observers were not allowed at the Eniwetok bomb test.

Roosevelt established the precedent of presidential co-operation with Britain in things atomic without congressional authorization.

HOUSING:

Modest Home

A modest home may be built for $5,900, federal rent director Tighe Woods has proven. He was trying to solve the military's housing difficulties.

The over-all size of the house is 15 by 38 feet. The price includes sewer and water systems.

Chairman Vinson (D., Ga.) of the house armed services committee said he was going to examine Wood's home near Fort Belvoir, Va. The committee has studied a military construction bill authorizing the armed services to spend more than 449 million to house 7,795 military families.

THE BILL would limit homes in the United States to $16,500 cost each with no limit on those built abroad.

Reds Covet Singapore, British Stronghold

British power has been challenged again in Singapore. From the walls, pictures of Chiang Kai-shek are being torn down and pictures of Mao Tse-tung, Communist, are being tacked furtively.

British rule was flaunted once before. Last summer the Chinese Communist high command ordered the Chinese Reds in Singapore to switch from agitation to direct action.

The British acted swiftly in the face of rioting and shooting, seizing Communist leaders and hanging some of them. Communist power was broken in the city.

Singapore is really two cities mixed together—a Chinese city and a British city.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, take a tract of land given free by the state to those people who will cultivate the wilderness in a modern homesteading proposition. They make friends with their neighbors including the Websters, Emerson Eliot and Absalom Flipp. They are awakened one night by rowdy hunters who previously used the Ives' home as their quarters. Andy barely averts a serious run-in with them. The following day, he and Dave go to town and sell their car for some mules and a buggy. Watson Bird, hardware store owner, warns Andy about the hunters. Andy learns that during his absence a hunter shot at a doe and hit his home instead.

CHAPTER VIII

"Let me go with you," Dave begged. "You ought not to go by yourself."

"I'd rather," Andy said.

Andy Ives had set his head. As he saw it, there was no way to reason around a course of definite action. A fierce protectiveness urged him on: A man had shot a charge of lead into the wall of his house. His house! No matter if it had been a moonshiner's hangout, no matter if hunters had camped there for several years, it was now the residence of Andy Ives and family, and a man had fired buckshot into it.

"It is a regrettable situation," Mr. Eliot said. "But my suggestion is that you ignore it. Passive resistance is often a powerful weapon, Mr. Ives."

"But I don't feel the least bit passive," Andy told him. "If I've got to face things like this, I might as well start now. Right now!"

Kate viewed her husband with surprise and perhaps a sense of deeper appreciation. Andy usually was cautious to the extreme, although she had known, always, that in a real test he would measure up four square.

"You're going, to satisfy your pride, Andy," she said. "Isn't that it?"

"Well, maybe." He shouldered a sack of flour, picked up a slab of side meat. "A man's got to have pride, and it's up to him to take care of it, or he loses it."

"Mr. Bird said for you to be careful all the time," Dave reminded him.

"I know it." Andy turned toward the cabin, to carry in his load. "I'll be careful. Say, Mr. Flipp, how do I get to their camp?"

"Well, you can go west from here, till you hit the big bend in the bayou; then you can turn downstream till you come to the old bridge. They're camped over there, 'bout a hundred yards below the bridge."

"Thanks." He went into the house.

Mr. Flipp looked at Kate. "Don't let him take a gun," he advised.

Mr. Eliot picked up a small bag of salt and followed Andy into the house. "I'll be glad to go with you," he offered. "It would be well if you were accompanied by a witness—a favorable witness — in case there were—er—developments."

Andy shook his head. "Thanks, but I don't want to get anybody else mixed up in my troubles. I don't mind going alone. There won't be many developments, I reckon."

"As you wish," Mr. Eliot acceded. "Just an idea of mine. After all, you were not here when the shot was fired, and unless you involve someone else you won't be able to make any accusation except a very general one."

"I've thought of that," Andy told him. "I won't have to call any names to make what I intend to say find its mark. Thanks just the same."

Mr. Eliot nodded. "By the way, your daughter has considerable talent for music. With a little practice, we will have some excellent numbers well in hand."

"Hope plays the piano right well when she's in practice," Andy said. "Well, I'll be getting along. I want to be back here before dark."

"Be very tactful," Mr. Eliot implored. "We are all disliked out here by the Newcastle clique, and whatever trouble you have with the hunters from there will be another mark against this section."

The Situation Is Explained to Andy

"Whatever I do or say won't have anything to do with the rest of you," Andy argued. "This is my affair."

Mr. Eliot removed his glasses and polished them with a very soiled handkerchief. He pursed his lips studiedly and blinked against the discomfort of having his glasses off. "You have raised an interesting point there," he said, "and I grant that you are, strictly speaking, correct, for it is your affair. However, Newcastle thinks of the donators as a group, and of everyone out here as part of that group. Mr. Flipp and I have no land to clear up, yet we are disliked too. You see, for several years this was all wild country, perfect for deer and turkey and moonshiners. The so-called sportsmen looked upon it as their private hunting ground. They would like to have it that way again, and whatever they can do to discourage those who are trying to settle this lowland and make it into farms, they will do."

"I see," Andy said slowly. "You've given me a better idea of the setup than I've had before now. Sure, I'll be careful, Mr. Eliot. I won't take my gun, for that would give them an excuse to say that I came to their camp looking for trouble."

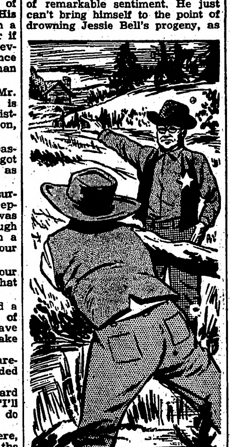
"Right," Mr. Eliot agreed. "Oh, say, Mr. Ives, to change the subject a little, I attempted to discourage Mr. Flipp from giving you that pup, but he was very determined. Please don't think I was involved in that generous move."

"We didn't think you were," Andy told him. "I've got to go now."

"Once Mr. Flipp makes up his mind," Mr. Eliot declared, putting on his spectacles again, "he is a very firm person. It was his view that you should have a dog." He laughed shortly, with little change of expression. "And when Jessie Bell has her next litter, along in the spring, he may offer you another."

"This one's enough!" Andy moaned.

"Certainly," Mr. Eliot agreed. "But Absalom Flipp is a person of remarkable sentiment. He just can't bring himself to the point of drowning Jessie Bell's progeny, as most men would do. He tries to find homes for them, and it is a problem in such a thinly settled area. With Jessie Bell's disposition toward motherhood, Mr. Flipp should live in a populous section—perhaps in a suburb of Chicago or New York."



"A man shot your house," the sheriff said slowly. "Surely it was an accident."

Andy laughed. "Well, I didn't know that angle. He was getting rid of a pup as well as giving me one!"

"Precisely!" Mr. Eliot concurred. "That is it, precisely!"

Andy left then for the hunters' camp. The sun was still about an hour high, and the woods were quiet, save for the occasional bark of a squirrel or the screaming and hooting of an owl heralding the approach of night.

The woods were dry, and leaves on the winding roadway whispered as Andy walked along.

He came to the bayou, which was so low that there seemed to be no current except in the shallow stretches between holes. Melancholy cypresses trailed beards of gray moss, straight and motionless in the windless late afternoon. It was a scene of brooding peace and quiet, where time stood still.

Introduction to Sig Flanagan

He followed the left bank of the stream until he reached the rough bridge. Here he crossed and turned left. Now he could see the shack where the hunters were camped.

The cabin door opened and a man came out. He was slender, wore horn-rimmed spectacles. Andy recognized David Wellons, county attorney from Monticello, a member of the party that had roused him from bed before dawn that morning.

When Wellons saw Andy, he turned back to the door and said something to those inside.

Five more men came out. One was the short, thick fellow who had made a show of wanting to fight Andy early that morning. Another was Sheriff Martin, Andy guessed, for he wore a star on his vest. He was a florid, portly man of fifty-something, with heavy features, except for his small, almost petulant, mouth. He was fighting a cigar. Behind him stood the tall, powerful figure of a man with black hair, swarthy face. His eyes were small and quick and dark, his nose high-bridged and noticeably thin in contrast to the broadness of his face, his mouth wide and thin-lipped, cruel. He was Sig Flanagan.

"Sheriff Martin?" Andy said by way of opening matters.

"Hello," the officer replied pleasantly enough. "We've just had a little appetizer to make a good supper better. Won't you take one? Come in and—"

"Thanks," Andy broke in, "but I don't indulge. I came to see you about—"

"Ah!" David Wellons broke in, smiling at Andy. "You're the gentleman we so rudely got out of bed this morning. The name—now let me see—I make a practice of recalling names, but—"

"Ives," Andy said. Again he couldn't be sure of the man's attitude, for he was either very courteous or slyly sarcastic. "I'm Andy Ives. Sheriff Martin, I came to see you about—"

"Don't indulge, he says," Sig Flanagan interrupted. "Maybe he'd like a bottle of beer. How about it, Ives? Have a beer. Be sociable. You're among friends. Three cases of it in the cabin."

"Thanks," Andy said, "but I don't care a thing about beer. I'm pleased to know I'm among friends, though." He turned to the sheriff again, started to speak.

"Sure, you're 'mong friends," Flanagan cut in, his speech growing less clear-cut, for his drinks were taking effect. "We're ev'body's friends, hey, sheriff?"

Sheriff Martin nodded. "That's right, Sig." He waved his cigar, laughed quickly, the tone of his laugh much higher than that of his speech. "I've got to be everybody's friend, or I'd be out of a job!" He turned to Andy, resumed his mien of seriousness and dignity. "Well, if you won't drink with us, how about supper? Plenty to eat, good coffee, and you'll be as welcome as the flowers in May."

"Thanks." Andy realized that they were either playing a game with him, or else they hadn't recognized him for a donator, and particularly for the donator who had caused them to change camp sites for the deer season. "Sheriff, I've just moved into this section, and I'm anxious to be friendly with everybody too, but when a man shoots—"

The short, thick one broke in: "You could've moved somewhere else, Ives, instead of where you did. We drive all the way down from Monticello and find our house taken by a homesteader. Heck of a note, ain't it, sheriff?"

"I'm not dealing with you," Andy said calmly, "unless I have to, and then I will. Too bad if I've interfered with your hunting. Now, keep out of this."

"He is right," said Wellons in his smooth way. "He is perfectly right, gentlemen of Hamilton. He wishes to deal with the sheriff, and we are but the guests of the sheriff."

"So, you're a donator," Sheriff Martin said slowly, his face losing the friendliness that had at first reassured Andy. "You're the one who took up the quarter section where we used to camp."

"I'm the one," Andy said. "I moved here in the hope of owning a peaceful farm and a place I'd be proud of. But I understand now that it's easy to have trouble here. This afternoon a man shot a load of buckshot into the west end of my house. I don't like that."

"Confucius say," intoned David Wellons, "that a man's house is his castle."

"A man shot your house," the sheriff said slowly. "Surely it was an accident."

"I don't think so," Andy told him. "The man was on a horse, chasing a deer. If he had shot at the deer—which happened to be a doe—the charge would have gone into the ground instead of into my wall ten feet above the ground."

Sheriff Martin nodded. "That's logical. Now, who could have done a trick like that?" He laughed again in the high-pitched tone. "What a hunter! Misses a deer and shoots a house! Don't know a deer from a house!" He nudged Sig Flanagan.

"Or a doe from a buck," Andy added. "I don't think it would be easy to make two mistakes like that all at once. Do you, sheriff?"

Face to Face Across a Table

"Does are protected," the officer replied. "I'm sure that none of my party would shoot at a doe." He looked with mock seriousness at the group. "Nobody here would shoot a doe, with a warden in camp, I know!" And, to Andy: "You see, we carry our own warden around to keep us straight. He's out, rounding up the hounds now."

"I was the one that shot the house," said Sig Flanagan, looking narrowly at Andy. "Must be that a limb knocked my gun up a little just as I pulled the trigger. Didn't shoot a hole through the wall, did I?"

"No." Andy faced him, saw smoldering anger in the man's eyes, saw the thin mouth twitching at almost perfectly regular intervals. "I'd rather you wouldn't shoot when you're so close to my house."

"S'pose I do?" Flanagan's voice was tight.

"There'll be trouble," Andy told him.

"What kind?"

"A bad kind and a quick kind, if I'm at home," Andy replied, and was amazed by the calm manner in which he had delivered the threat.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: The plaster in our front room is very uneven in places, and in others there are real humps and ridges. Are there any tools we could get to level down the humps and ridges?

ANSWER: Wrap coarse sandpaper around a block of wood and rub down the rough places with it. If the walls are painted, they will have to be refinished after this going-over, of course. A coarse abrasive stone can be used in place of the sandpaper.

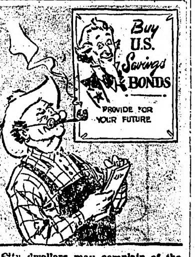
Uncle Sam Says



City dwellers may complain of the hot days but farmers realize how necessary sunshine is to their growing crops. They know full well that without sunshine there will be no food—just as they know that without financial security they have no protection for retirement or for the hazards of farming. This fall, when the crops are all in, they will welcome the Opportunity to invest a lot of their profit in additional Savings Bonds. With those Bonds they are confident about the future—for security in old age or for any emergency. $75 in Savings Bonds grows into $100 in ten years time.

White Ash and Rattlers

Is it true that rattlesnakes do not live where white ash trees grow? There is some justification for this idea. White ash grows generally on a rich, moist soil in thick woods and near water, while rattlesnakes prefer as a rule open, dry, stony, sunny places. Thus, they are not likely to be together.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Specs And I See Eye To Eye

Asked Specs Allen to go hunting last week. Known him all my life, so I wasn't surprised when he showed up with no gun. Specs doesn't like to kill anything.

Couldn't ask for a better hunting companion, though. We tramp around the woods, and whenever the dogs flush a bird, I blaze away while Specs just watches.

Told him once I was surprised he went along . . . feeling the way he does about shooting anything. "Well, Joe," he says, "you do what you think is right and I'll stick to what I think is right. I've no call to dislike you for not seeing everything the way I see it."

From where I sit, open-mindedness is a wonderful quality. There are plenty of things Specs admires that I don't care for. Like his fondness for buttermilk. I'd rather have a glass of beer anytime . . . but Specs Allen and I don't let little differences get in the way of something big like friendship.

As every good cook knows, the secret of veal cookery is using a long, slow method. This will keep veal from being tough, even though it has little fat. For chops and cutlets, braising is better than frying. Roasting is usually recommended for the more tender cuts and pot-roasting for the less tender ones.

Letter from V. Larson's Manager

Following is a letter received about one of Holt's former residents of whom we are watching climb the ladder of success in the world of sports, which helps so much in making strong minds and bodies of our young people.

Dear Mrs. Hanson:

Am passing on to you a few lines regarding Virgil Larson's boxing life here.

Virgil engaged in several outstanding boxing tournaments in the Pacific Northwest this year. He appeared on a number of the really big amateur tournaments in this section of the country. Perhaps Virgil's best performance was on the Northwest Golden Glove tournament in Seattle in February. He was one of the outstanding boxers on this occasion, which drew amateur boxers from all over the Northwest, and a crowd of twenty thousand spectators.

I have been pro-longing Virgil's entry into the professional ranks of boxing. I wanted more to see Virgil earn himself a good education. Due to Virgil's outstanding boxing ability, he has been given a scholarship at Gonzaga College Spokane, Washington. The athletic department at this college received information about the good boxing ability of the boy and at once offered Virgil the chance to attend their school of higher learning. After receiving his degree at Gonzaga, we will then think about his entering the professional entry into boxing. Personally, I feel Virgil will prove one of the outstanding College boxers in the nation. By the way, Gonzaga College is the former skhool of Bing Crosby

We cannot forget the boxing ability of Virgils fifteen year old brother Ruggles. He weighs 110 pounds and is without a doubt the smartest young boxer his age and weight in the Northwest. In about ten amateur bouts, Ruggles lost only one bout.

Sincerely.
Homer Amundsen.

The boys are sons of Leonard Larsons ot Tacoma.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

A-Bomb Output Hits Record Peak; House Approves Vet Pension Hike; Anderson Proposes New Farm Plan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

ATOM BOMB:

Record Output

Maybe the atomic bomb isn't the world's most fearful weapon. Maybe the bomb's effectiveness for destruction has been over-emphasized. Maybe it doesn't mean anything at all—but if potential enemies of the U.S. could squeeze any comfort from those "maybe's," they were welcome to it.

For the United States had announced that its atom bomb production had reached an all-time high in the first six months of this year, and production is now on an assembly-line basis.

IN making that announcement, the atomic energy commission also announced that enormous tonnages of low grade uranium ores, have been located in this country, and could be used to produce A-bombs in an emergency if foreign supplies of high-grade ore were cut off.

All these disclosures were contained in the commission's sixth semi-annual report to congress.

Pointedly enough, the report made no mention of recent to-level secret conferences relative to sharing information with Britain and Canada.

It did have a lot to say, however, about the problems behind those conferences—United States' dependence on high-grade uranium ores from Canada and the Belgian Congo.

THE REPORT revealed that reserves of semi-processed ores are being built up steadily "to assure continuity of production." Research is being pressed on new extraction methods to cut the cost of processing the low-grade ores which abound in this country. And "actions have been taken to improve and make more certain the supply of ore from abroad."

This latter statement, which was not explained, presumably referred to later negotiations with Britain and Canada for a long-term agreement on exchange of atomic information and division of uranium ore.

FARM PLAN:

Something New

Farm plans, or substitutes therefor, were still kicking around the halls of congress, despite recent legislative action retaining the current program of farm price subsidies.

Latest proposal in the field came from Senator Anderson (D., N.M.) but it was another formula which didn't appeal to everyone's taste. Senator Anderson is the same gentleman who was onetime U.S. secretary of agriculture.

BRIEFLY, his plan called for flexible government supports for some crops, rigid control plans for others, and authority to try out the Brannan plan for subsidy on some perishables.

Anderson heads a seven-man subcommittee casting about for an acceptable farm bill.

Unless the senate and house managed to get together on some program, the delayed-action Aitken law passed by the Republican 80th congress would take effect January 1. It would permit, although not compel, the secretary of agriculture to maintain supports for major crops on a flexible scale ranging from 60 to 90 per cent of parity.

The senators "try-out" proposal for the Brannan plan would be limited to "nonstorage perishables" including oranges, grapefruit, apples and vegetables.

ARMED UNITY:

Up to Truman

Final action on the bill strengthening unification of the armed services was up to President Truman—but there was no doubt that he would affix his signature to the measure in speedy fashion.

BY a lopsided vote of 356 to 7, the house gave final congressional approval to the measure in a bid for greater efficiency and economy in military operations.

The bill, which was sent to the President for his signature, sprung directly from the recommendations of the commission headed by former President Herbert Hoover.

THE citizens' committee for the Hoover report, headed by Dr. Robert L. Johnson, president of Temple university, immediately hailed adoption of the bill as "paving the way for savings of at least a billion dollars a year, and maybe more."

New Justice

U. S. Attorney General Tom Clark, smiling so broadly here, hesitated but a short while before accepting President Truman's offer of appointment to the United States supreme court bench. Sen. J. Howard McGrath (D., R.I.) was to succeed Clark as attorney general.

PENSIONS:

More for Vets

Veterans of World Wars I and II and the Spanish-American war stood to benefit to the tune of an additional 112 million dollars a year if a bill passed by the national house of representatives is approved by the senate.

WITHOUT a single dissenting vote, the house passed a measure raising veterans' pensions and disability payments by that figure annually.

There was another possible hurdle for the measure, however, even if it should pass the senate, for house action on the bill was taken despite objections from the White House. Whether this means that President Truman would have the political fortitude to veto such a bill if it ever came to him is an interesting conjecture. The logical supposition is that he would not, particularly if he entertains any ideas of seeking a second term in 1952.

To indicate the potential weight of the veterans' vote as interpreted by house members, despite the fact that there was no opposition, a roll call was ordered and 354 members got "on the record" as approving the measure.

THE VETERANS' administration estimated that the first year cost of the proposal would exceed 112.5 million dollars. It made no estimate of costs in subsequent years.

Principal provisions of the bill: Increase from $138 to $150 rate of pay for total disability; increase monthly payments to widows and dependents of wartime casualties; full compensation for World War I veterans with disabilities presumed to be service-connected instead of the present 75 per cent; additional pay for dependents of veterans with service-connected 50 per cent disabilities.

At present such payments are made only if the disability is 60 per cent.

GIVE-AWAYS:

No Sinecure

The business of winning radio give-away prizes is not all beer-and-skittles. A Hollywood insurance man is authority for the conclusion.

He spent his vacation as a contestant on such shows and wound up with $150 in one week—much more than he could have made working. He attended 20 radio shows, averaging four a day, saying that he couldn't stand any more than that.

That's all he could stand, he said. "It's much more work than working," he explained. "The questions are easy, but the nervous strain is terrific. It's too hard on me to do it more than one week each year. He made his killing, however, on one program. He was asked to tell a girl how her husband would feel about her having a baby.

He replied that "things are very convenient for fathers these days." For that he received prizes worth $150. How to get picked as a contestant? Just sit on the aisle and wisecrack as the announcer goes by.

ROUGH GOING

Adversity Plagues Viking Saga Revival

The "invading" vikings had not counted on England's weather. So, what was to have been a thrilling, colorful arrival of a sleek oaken ship on the Thames, turned into a ride in a green bus, with the Vikings' horned helmets lying in their laps and their sharp spears neatly stacked in the racks overhead. It was all rather anti-climatic.

The band of modern Danish Vikings rowed and sailed their open boat through more than 600 miles of North Sea to reach England. Along the banks of the Thames thousands of Britishers had gathered to see them arrive. But bad weather intervened and the Vikings decided to have their ship towed up-river to pier.

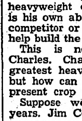
Flotsam and Jetsam Heavyweights

By GRANTLAND RICE

THERE ARE TWO things that make a great or an unusual heavyweight champion. The first is his own ability. The second is a competitor or an opponent who can help build the headlines!

This is no alibi for Ezzard Charles. Charles might be the greatest heavyweight of all time, but how can he prove it with the present crop of challengers?

Suppose we look back a few years. Jim Corbett had a Sullivan to beat. Fitzsimmons had a Corbett to handle. Fitz had a Jeffries in the road and Jeff had a Fitz and a Corbett. Also a Tom Sharkey. And the old sailor was no squash. He could fight.



Grantland Rice

Jack Johnson had Jim Jeffries for his build-up, although Jeff was then fat and partly bald.

Jack Dempsey, a great fighter, had the best break of them all. Jack, weighing 183 pounds the day before the Willard fight, had a 260 pound giant to face, a fighter who, after all, had won the title from the great Jack Johnson.

After that Dempsey had Carpentier, the great French war hero, his ability as a heavyweight far overpublicized. But the build-up was on. Then Dempsey was lucky enough to come upon the massive Firpo, the wild bull of the Pampas, the fighter who threw rocks.

After Firpo the old mauler from Manassa had two other good breaks as far as crowds, excitement and reputation go. He had Gene Tunney and Jack Sharkey.

Tunney was the dead game young heavyweight just out of the war. He could box, punch and take his share. He was badly underrated. So was Jack Sharkey on days or nights he wanted to fight. Which wasn't too often. This Sharkey was the most temperamental fighter the ring ever saw. But he could box and punch — when he wanted to.

Dempsey had all the fight game needed—great ability to start with—a flaming spirit—and at least five opponents who could draw $1,000,000 gates.

Dempsey was responsible for the two great Tunney crowds. No one knows this better than Gene, although he added his share. It was entirely different when Tunney had to face his ring future without any Dempsey around. I think Tunney retired when he did for many valid reasons.

• • •

New Order

Now we begin to see what Ezzard Charles is up against, what any heavyweight champion might be up against. This includes Joe Louis. It is certain to work heavily against Ezzard Charles.

Tunney had a sorry lot to face after Dempsey lost his second start. He had Sharkey, Risko, Heeney and one or two more. They were all terrible. Tunney picked Heeney, a short-armed pushover. I know Rickard wanted Sharkey, who had lost to Risko.

After Tunney had completed his operation on Heeney, there was nothing left—just as there is nothing left today—Sharkey, Schmeling, Baer, Carnera, Braddock—flotsam and jetsam. Both Schmeling and Baer were dangerous punchers at times, Braddock was smart, game but all through—while Carnera was a 265 pound joke.

Here was a spot in which no great heavyweight could have proved his rightful place. There was nothing but inferior fighters to face.

Then Joe Louis came along. Joe Louis has been a great fighter. A hard puncher and a fine boxer but only fair on the receiving side where head punches have hurt him.

Louis has never drawn one of the head liners to beat. Most of those Joe stopped had been beaten by somebody else. Braddock out pointed Baer. Baer knocked out Schmeling. Baer wrecked Carnera, a joke from start to finish—Louis was forced to get his reputation from a second-rate group—headed by Billy Conn, a light heavyweight. But Schmeling was the best fighter Louis had to meet through his career.

20 Game Winners

As usual, the crop of 20 game winners will be quite thin this season. Only a trifle over two months are left and there are still only five of six pitchers who are in fairly close shooting range. The three with the better chance to land in this promised territory are Ken Heintzelman of the Phillies, Howie Pollet of the Cardinals and Vic Raschi of the Yankees.

Heintzelman has done the best job of the year.

The laundress's rival tried desperately to find someone who could dispute the washwoman's assertion that she had blue blood in her veins.

"Could be," said one of those asked, "all the women on her side of the family have used washing-blue for eight generations."

Two very distinguished looking Southern gentlemen met on the street one morning after having attended a party the night before. The major greeted his ranking officer with all the respect and solemnity that the occasion demanded.

"Colonel," he said, "how do you feel, suh?"

The colonel's reply was just a bit on the brusque side.

"Major," he declared a little thickly, "I feel like hell, suh, as any Southern gentleman should, suh, at this hour of the morning."

A social climber, trying to impress a prominent member of a club she had just joined, traced her ancestry all the way back to Julius Caesar.

The prominent member admitted that went back quite a distance but pointed out that the pedigree of her own family filled six pages of parchment and in the middle was a notation, "About this time the world was created."

Here's WHY Firestone CHAMPIONS GO THROUGH WHERE OTHERS HANG UP!
LET'S talk facts . . . Here is a tire that has extra bar height, extra bar length, and a curved bar design that outcleans, outpulls, and outlasts any other tire. NO OTHER TIRE has ALL these advantages.
Those massive tread bars take a bigger bite, a better hold—and THAT'S NOT ALL. Because they're curved for self-cleaning, they keep right on pulling while other tires only clog and spin.
And here's another big feature. Every inch of tread-bar length does its share of the pulling because the low-pressure body design puts ALL of the tread in FULL ground contact for a FULL TRACTION BITE. Because it's patented, this tire gives you many advantages which no other tire has. Let your Firestone Dealer or Firestone Store demonstrate these facts to your satisfaction.
3 RULES FOR MAXIMUM TRACTION
1. USE FIRESTONE CHAMPIONS
2. USE FIRESTONE HYDRO-FLATION
3. USE ONLY 12 LBS. PRESSURE

Uncle Sam Says

Buy U.S. Savings BONDS
PROVIDE FOR YOUR FUTURE

City dwellers may complain of the hot days but farmers realize how necessary sunshine is to their growing crops. They know full well that without sunshine there will be no food—just as they know that without financial security they have no protection for retirement or for the hazards of farming. This fall, when the crops are all in, they will welcome the Opportunity to invest a lot of their profit in additional Savings Bonds. With these Bonds they are confident about the future—for security in old age or for any emergency. $75 in Savings Bonds grows into $100 in ten years time.

White Ash and Rattlers

Is it true that rattlesnakes do not live where white ash trees grow? There is some justification for this idea. White ash grows generally on a rich, moist soil in thick woods and near water, while rattlesnakes prefer as a rule open, dry, stony, sunny places. Thus, they are not likely to be together.

Here's Best Way To Store Plant Food 'Til Spring

CHICAGO—Fertilizer bought now can be safely stored on farms this winter and kept in good condition until spring planting time, if farmers follow a few simple precautions, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"By placing their orders for fertilizer now and taking delivery as soon as they can get it," says the statement, "farmers can be sure of having on hand all the plant food they need for the 1949 crop season.

"That is particularly important in view of the fact that even with present high production, supplies of some fertilizers may fall considerably short of all needs next spring."

The committee suggests these winter storage rules:

1—Store sacks of plant food only in the barn or some other dry building that has flooring off the ground.

2—If you have to use earth or cement floors, stack fertilizer bags on a crib of blocks and boards.

3—If sacks are of burlap, keep the piles close together. This will reduce the circulation of air from which the fertilizer may soak up moisture.

4—Put no more than 7 or 8 bags in a stack. In high stacks the pressure of the top bags will tend to cake the fertilizer on the bottom of the pile.

5—Keep broken bags separate from the main pile. Loose fertilizer soaks up moisture.

End of Passenger Pigeon

The air once was filled with passenger pigeons—unlimited billions. Hunters shot them down by hundreds and then thousands in every new excursion. Eventually they exterminated them, not because of their food value, but because they made nice targets for gunfire.

'Milk and Honey'

The proverbial milk and honey diet will provide adequate amounts of calcium, phosphorus, thiamine, riboflavin, ascorbic acid, pantothenic acid, nicotinic acid for adults.

THE FARMER GETS A FAIRER DEAL

...says GEORGE PETERSEN
Hutchinson, Minnesota, dairyman

"By marketing through Land O'Lakes, we farmers get fairer treatment and more returns than any place else," says Mr. Petersen, who milks 20 Guernseys on his 100-acre farm near Hutchinson. "With Land O'Lakes, any extra returns come back to the farmers because we own all our own marketing setup ... and we make savings at three levels—processing, distribution and marketing. In a co-op, too, we've got something to say about management." If you milk cows or raise poultry, sell through Land O'Lakes. As farmers will tell you, it pays.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Congress Beats Off ERP Fund Cut; Russia Winning Cold War in East; Personal Incomes Rise in Nation

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

SALUTE TO ISTANBUL . . . The U. S. sixth task fleet arrived in Istanbul recently for a five-day visit. One of the ships, the USS Fargo, a cruiser and flagship of the group, is shown firing a salute to Istanbul city. In middle background can be seen the aircraft carrier Coral Sea.

ERP FUND:

5.75 Billions More

The European recovery program appeared set for another year. The senate, by a vote of 63 to 7, voted a 5.75 billion dollar appropriation to take care of European recovery needs and pay U. S. occupation costs abroad. Final action came after two weeks of debate.

THE SENATE voted a full 12-month program, with no authority of the spending agency to expend the money in a shorter period. At the same time, it approved an outlay of $344,000 for a congressional watchdog committee to keep a check on foreign spending.

The upper chamber of congress gave tacit approval to nationalization of industries—in England, that is—by knocking down an amendment which would have withheld recovery funds from any nation which in the future nationalized an industry. This was aimed directly at Great Britain.

The bill provided:

One hundred and fifty million dollars for ECA loans to Europe.

A billion, 740 million dollars for ECA's May-June operations.

NINE HUNDRED MILLION for army occupation costs in Germany, Austria, Japan and the Ryuku islands.

Forty-five billion for Greece and Turkey.

In its struggle with the bill, the senate beat off efforts to earmark 500 million dollars for a loan to Spain and to require the ECA and the army to earmark two billion dollars for surplus U. S. farm products.

CHINA:

Lost Cause

Accusations, name-calling, recrimination did nothing to distort the picture—if the United States was winning the cold war in the West, she was losing it in the East.

The United State's "white paper" on what had happened in China and why charged vigorously that Communist victory over the Chinese and the disintegration of the Nationalist government were all the fault of Nationalist Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek.

SAID DEAN ACHESON, U. S. secretary of state: "Full blame for the ominous result of the Chinese civil war accrues to Chiang Kai-shek and other Nationalist leaders because they lost no battle as the result of a lack of American aid."

In obvious contrast to the firm policy in dealing with Russia on problems affecting the West, Acheson said of China's future and U. S. aims in that direction: "Future U. S. policy must concentrate on relieving China of the Moscow-inspired foreign yoke of Communism."

That appeared easier said than done, however. There was no pact and no arms program to warn off the Reds, and, anyway, the Communists were on the ground and in control. Even the most optimistic among the diplomats in Washington would realize that throwing the Communists out of China would be a long, hard fight.

A FORMER AMBASSADOR to China, Major Pat Hurley, was quick to charge that the state department's "white paper" was nothing but an alibi for U.S. failure to stem the Communist tide in China.

Radio Jam

According to reliable reports, Moscow's jamming of radio programs has tuned down the "Voice of America" to a mere whisper of its former self.

THESE REPORTS declare that Russian interference with programs beamed to the Soviet has been so effective as to cut to 10 per cent the American broadcasts which now permeate the region around Moscow.

Two official American protests against these jamming tactics were made last year, but in each case Moscow disclaimed any knowledge of such interference.

The Kremlin aim is obvious. Russian leaders are making every effort to isolate the Soviet people more completely from the west. Reception of American-originated broadcasts would have no place in that objective.

U.S. INCOMES:

Higher Than Ever

The status of consumer buying power in the nation was good. In fact, personal incomes, which are the mainspring of such buying, increased in June, according to reports of the federal department of commerce.

THE RISE helped push incomes for the first six months of 1949 to a level 2.6 per cent higher than the first half of boom-time 1948.

The report estimated that the flow of personal income from all sources reached an annual rate of 213.5 billion dollars in June. The commerce department's study showed the upturn had been continuing for three months, April through June, and that the gain accelerated as it continued.

An increase in farm income was cited by the department as the main cause of the June increase in personal income, as compared with that of May.

THE DEPARTMENT regarded as more significant, however, the fact that factory payrolls were credited with a slight increase in June after having declined steadily since last September.

COMIC BOOKS:

New Approach

The impact of so-called "comic books" on juvenile minds and their influence for good or evil has recently been a subject of widespread controversy in these United States. Some municipalities banned sale of the more objectionable books, others contented themselves with talking; but San Diego, it appears, has come up with a most sensible approach.

That southern California city has started what it calls a "comic book of the month club." It's purpose is to "put the fun back into funny books," from whence it has been conspicuously absent all these years.

The movement was launched after many San Diego families became disturbed about the subject matter of many of the comic books.

THE project depends upon cooperation of the comic-book publishers. If that can be obtained, publishers would submit the books to a board of review in advance of publication. Books that were approved would be mailed to club subscribers, who would be divided into different age groups.

'JOHN BULL' IRKED

British Resent Policy Criticism in U.S.

Word from London was to the effect that the British are no little perturbed at the mounting criticism in the United States of England's recovery efforts. Official British sources said they believed many of the complaints are based on lack of knowledge of Britain's problems and achievements since the end of World War II.

The British were rather perceptive in partial interpretation of the cause of criticism here. Some informants expressed the belief much of it may stem from dislike of President Truman's overall economic policy, and added this may be the reason Britain has become the object of attack by Republicans and others who seek to pile up political capital in America by continuing to criticize the British.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, no sooner get to their new dwelling in the wilderness, than they meet adventure. Andy is informed by hunters that the home he has taken for his own in the homestead movement was formerly used by them as a camping place. He is warned by Watson Bird, businessman, not to cross up the hunters who include Sig Flanagan, Sheriff Martin and Sam Bragg. While Andy is in town, a hunter deliberately shoots at his home, pretending to be aiming at a doe. Andy is infuriated and, accompanied by Emerson Eliot, he goes to town and exchanges words with his enemies, but gets nowhere.

CHAPTER IX

"I wasn't at home today. I may be next time."

"I'll shoot when and where I please!" Flanagan said. His long, thick fingers were working nervously, and his black eyes seemed deeper set, drawn in by rage. "I'll shoot—"

"There are laws protecting homes," Andy said, "but I don't want to move in here and start 'lawing.' I've always got along with people, and I want to keep it up; but you can't make a practice of shooting my house. You nor anybody else. Don't forget that."

Sig Flanagan growled thickly and started toward Andy. "I don't take threats from smart alecks like you!" he snarled. "I'll make you wish I'd shot the wall in, with you under it!"

"Wait, Sig," Sheriff Martin said quickly, catching his arm. "I'll take care of this."

Flanagan shook him off and crouched to lunge at Andy, but the sheriff moved quickly in front of him. "There are better ways, Sig," he said softly. "Better ways of handling things like this. Get hold of yourself."

Andy stood very still, tensed for the threatened onslaught. He knew that Flanagan could give him a terrific beating, for the man was powerful and driven by a fierce temper. But he stood still, ready to take what he had to and to give all he could.

"I'll beat his face in!" Flanagan raged. "Stand aside, sheriff. I'll fix him so his wife and kids won't know him for a week!"

"No, Sig. This is my camp, and I won't have trouble like this. Quiet down, now. Take it easy; you'll feel better."

"Sure, come along, Sig," Wellons invited. "Let's drink to the house that looked like a deer! Come on, fellow!"

Sig Flanagan faced Andy, across the sheriff's shoulder. He was mouthing curses softly, weaving unsteadily. "We'll meet again," he said. "I'll make you wish you'd stayed home and played marbles with the buckshot I put in your wall!"

Then he turned and followed Wellons into the cabin.

"Of course, Mr. Ives," the sheriff said soothingly, "it was an accident. Sig wouldn't have had any reason to shoot your house, I'm sure."

"Well, I hope not," Andy said, "but I can't see how he happened to shoot it at all. Look, sheriff, I've never liked to see land posted against hunting unless there was a mighty good reason for it. Still, a man can't have things like this happening. You understand that, I know."

"Oh, sure! Sure, Ives. Very disturbing." He looked narrowly at Andy, then away. "And as for posting your land, I hardly think that necessary. We deer hunters aren't a bad lot, after all. And, too, it would just make a lot of trouble for you."

"What kind of trouble?" Andy inquired.

"Well, it happens that the authorities you'd appeal to in case of violations wouldn't be interested in helping you out."

"You mean, I wouldn't have any protection from you?"

"Don't put it quite like that," Sheriff Martin begged gently. "Of course, I've sworn to uphold the law and to enforce all regulations, but I can't do everything alone." He shrugged. "My deputies are all deer hunters. The game warden is one too. The prosecuting attorney of the county is in camp here with us." He nodded toward the cabin. "Taking a nap right now. You see how it is."

"I see," Andy said slowly. "Thanks."

Flipp Stands by His New Neighbor

"Welcome, Ives. And another bit of advice: Don't be too quick to have trouble with Sig Flanagan. He's a tough customer when he's riled."

"I can't help how tough he is," Andy declared. "When I think I'm right about something, I have to go ahead."

When he left the camp, Andy knew that he had accomplished little good by coming. He knew he had laid the way open for future trouble with Sig Flanagan. On the other hand, he felt that he had established himself as a man who would stand up for his rights. Maybe that was bad too, but it made him feel better.

The sun was setting when he crossed the bridge and headed east.

"Wait, an' I'll walk with you," someone called. "Just happened to mosey down this way."

It was Mr. Flipp. He was emerging from a clump of sumac near the bank of the bayou, carrying his rifle loosely in the curve of his right arm. The two fox squirrels swung from his belt, revealing that he hadn't been to his cabin since leaving the Ives premises.

"Hello," Andy greeted him. "Wasn't looking for you down here."

Mr. Flipp asked no questions as they walked along the dim road through the woods. Andy knew that he had come down here to help him in case he needed it.

"I got along all right," said Andy.

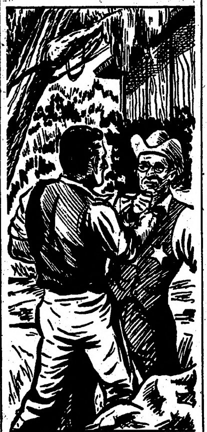
"That's good."

"Sheriff Martin doesn't seem to be a bad fellow."

Abaslom spat. "Dang' politician!" he said sadly. "Slicker'n owl grease in August."

"Well, I can see why some of the Newcastle folks feel the way they do about us," Andy said. "Their families have been here for years; their grandfathers opened up this country. We're newcomers."

"That don't make us bad people, though," Mr. Flipp pointed out. "If they wasn't no newcomers to a place, it'd stagnate like a slough with no fresh water comin' into it."



"Stand aside, sheriff. I'll fix him so his wife and kids won't know him for a week!"

Andy nodded, struck by the aptness of the figure. He wanted to thank his gaunt companion for being near at hand when trouble threatened, but he didn't know just how to go about it. He was sure that Mr. Flipp wanted him to think their meeting at the bridge purely accidental. So he said nothing.

"Sheriff Martin didn't come from one of the fine ol' fam'lies," Mr. Flipp said. "He gits his power through the machine he's built up durin' the last twelve years."

Oreen Webster Enters the Scene

"Why doesn't some good man run for office?" Andy asked. "That Martin outfit shouldn't be allowed to hold onto things forever."

Absalom Flipp shook his head slowly. "Good men don't want the kind of politics they'd have to play to fight the ring. They's one or two fellers in Newcastle that might give Martin a tough fight, but they're in business an' don't want to git into mudslingin' an' trickery."

"Who are they?"

"Well, the main one's Mr. Burke. He's got a lumberyard. He's a fine feller, but he don't need the office an'—"

"But the county needs a good man," Andy broke in. "I wish he'd run."

"Mebbe he will if things git bad enough. I think the homesteaders would s'port him."

They came to the fork of the woods road. Mr. Flipp said, "If ol' man Eliot's still at yore house, fiddlin', sen' him home to supper."

The Websters came the next afternoon, bringing Oreen, a chunky, brown-eyed girl of 16, who imperiled nature's efforts to make her pretty by using lipstick and rouge. Her hair was reddish and richly curled. She wore a striking red suit, the skirt a trifle more than attractively tight.

Kate and Hope were out front, greeting the Websters, when Andy and Dave arrived with their first wagonload of logs.

"Look!" Dave whispered dryly. "They brought their girl this time!"

"Cute, from here," Andy said. "A little hefty, but cute."

Dave swallowed hard and wished they hadn't brought Oreen—specially all dressed up like that!

"Well, well!" Harley Webster called in his raspy voice as the wagon approached. "Hard at work, are you? Why didn't you send me word? I'd have come and helped you get started."

"You've your own work to do," Andy said. "Thanks just the same."

"Never too busy to help a neighbor. Birdie said, 'Le's drop over and see how the Iveses are makin' out,' an' I said, 'All right.' An' since Oreen didn't go to school today—"

"Now, Harley," Mrs. Webster broke in wearily, "it was you that said we'd go over and see the Iveses. Right after dinner you said, 'Birdie, we ought to go over and—' "

"All right, sugah, maybe I did. No matter who said it first, here we are! Oreen, this is Dave. Nice-lookin' boy, ain't he?"

"Hi, Dave," Oreen said in a tone that hinted timidity, although her manner of address was forthright.

Dave nodded.

"What grade are you in?" Oreen asked.

"The eleventh, up at Harbisonville," he told her.

"I'm in the tenth," she said, tossing her curls. "You startin' to school next week?"

Dave shook his head. "I'll have to miss awhile," he informed her. "Got a lot to do."

"I don't go reg'lar," she said, and a trifle loftily. "Ain't much to it."

Kate invited them into the house, but Birdie demurred. "We don't want to bother you from your work," she said. "I told Harley when he first mentioned comin' over that we mustn't bother you."

"Oh, you won't. We're busy, tacking up cardboard where the cracks let cold air in. Come on in and we'll give you a job."

"An' I'll help Andy an' the boy," said Harley. He slapped Dave on his shoulder. "That is, unless you'd ruther go in with the womenfolks, sonny. Maybe you'd like to rest awhile an' talk to 'Reen." He laughed merrily.

"I'll help with the logs," Dave said hastily.

Oreen lingered behind the others as they started into the house. "Do you like to go to parties?" she asked Dave.

"Not much." He wished she'd go on with Hope, who was waiting for her.

"We have a lot of fun at parties," Oreen said. "We play games an' dance, an' all. I'll let you know when there's goin' to be one somewhere."

Dave wheeled and went away, following the wagon toward the pole fence enclosing what would be the barn lot.

The Websters remained until late afternoon. Harley proved a willing and valuable helper, and they made good progress with the barn-building. He would come back the next day and maybe he could bring another neighbor or two. "Don't bother about being beholden to people for free help," he said generously.

In the house, Mrs. Webster and the women worked at tacking up heavy strips, cut from boxes, over the cracks. Oreen didn't help with the tacking, for that would have made her bend and stretch, and she wasn't dressed for such exertion; but she cut pieces of cardboard for the others. Every time the wagon passed the house, she went to the window and watched it go by, following Dave with her brown eyes.

"Child," Granny said at last, piqued by her inordinate interest in Dave, "don't you have any brothers?"

"She's our only chick and child, Mrs. Craig," Birdie Webster answered before Oreen could make reply. "How'd you happen to ask her that?

"The way she watches Dave," Granny said frankly, "made me wonder if boys aren't a sort of curiosity to her. I didn't think she had any brothers."

Oreen flushed and tossed her head, but her mother, either realizing the justice of Granny's observation or unwilling to let anything threaten the Webster-Ives axis, smoothed it over.

Granny Needles A Flighty Girl

"Well, you know how girls her age are when a new boy comes around. It ain't that she's not used to boys, 'cause she's had a lot of dates. Why, there's a boy in Newcastle that's beggin' her to go steady with him, but Oreen don't like him much. He's got a bad case of adenoids, an' keeps his mouth open, an' that embarrasses Oreen. I think she likes Dave, though. Don't you, Oreen?"

"He's right cute," Oreen said. "Did he ever go steady with a girl?"

"Heavens, no!" Kate exclaimed. "Why, Dave's just a kid. He never did even go unsteady with a girl."

"That's funny," Oreen said. "I've been going with the boys since I was thirteen. He's a lot older than thirteen."

"You got an early start," Granny said dryly.

"Oreen was always big for her age," said Mrs. Webster, "and I've taught her well, so she knows how to act with boys."

Oreen tossed her curls and looked out of the window.

Mrs. Webster said cautiously to Hope: "They's one young fellow you'll have to watch pretty closte if you go out with him. He's slick with the girls."

"Who is he?" Hope asked as she fitted a strip of cardboard over a crack at one end of the rough board that served for a mantel.

Bumper Crops Eliminate Famine Scourge in World

The "long expected postwar recession in agriculture" got under way in 1948, but it was proving to be unlike the often mentioned agricultural panic of 1921.

The world food crisis, still in a dangerous phase in the early part of the year, became notably easier with the excellent harvests in many parts of the world, and, more particularly, the bumper crops in western Europe and the United States.

All except a few of the more pessimistic began to regard the food situation with cautious optimism. Famine for once was not prevalent in any large portion of the world during 1948.

As bumper crop piled on bumper crop, worries returned in the surplus exporting areas, particularly the United States, as to whether world markets would continue to absorb the surpluses, and how price support programs and accumulating stockpiles might be managed.

This turn of events received emphasis, as evidence accumulated that the acreage already sown under favorable conditions, and to be sown with wheat for 1949 harvest, would probably be a new high record.

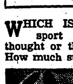
SPORTLIGHT

Instinct Is Guide of the Great

By GRANTLAND RICE

WHICH IS THE MAIN factor in sport competition—direct thought or the subconscious mind? How much success belongs to quick brain work and how much to intuition?



Grantland Rice

To help settle this issue, we called in the patriarch of brain waves, the same being John Kieran, who in his day was a high-class competitor at Fordham and who needs no further comment when it comes to a matter of brain action.

"The subconsicous mind," according to Kieran, "does most of the work. The brain can't work with the speed needed to handle too many situations. For example a jockey has less than a fifth of a second on many occasions to decide whether he must go inside or stay outside. A Ted Williams will often wait until the ball is within 15 feet of the plate before he decides to swing—or not to swing. That is another fifth-of-a-second decision.

"Some brains, of course, work faster than others. But there are few that can work with split-second speed in making a decision. Subconscious action takes over or intuition or whatever you want to call it."

Both Eddie Arcaro and Ted Atkinson bear out this angle in regard to racing.

"I'll be moving up," Arcaro said, "and suddenly there's an opening to the left. I haven't time to size things up. Your intuition acts for you—and sometimes your intuition can be wrong. You can use your brain in mapping out a race in advance. But once you get into fast action, you've got to depend a lot on your reflexes or your intuition, which are the products of experience. In fact, I think this is where experience counts most. I mean in giving you the right intuition."

Boxing follows the same line. A younger fighter, in his prime, sees an opening and punches at practically the same instant. Or he sees a punch coming and ducks. Later on, he is just as smart. His brain is just as good as it was years before. But his subconscious action has slowed down, his intuitive action has gone rusty—so he punches for the opening too late or he doesn't quite duck in time.

Joe Louis, for example, has as good a brain in 1948 as he had in 1938, but though he kept catching Walcott in 1948, his subconscious reactions were too slow to land a knockout punch.

Applied to Golf

"Now golf is a game," J. Kieran continued, "that should be played with a subconscious mind entirely. But it isn't. The ball isn't moving so there is the deadly temptation to start thinking—what club to use, etc. This is when the trouble begins.

"Remember that round Watts Gunn had in the amateur at Oakmont in 1925? I think Watts lost the first five holes, I know he was being murdered. Then suddenly he seemed to settle into a trance and he won the next 15 holes—15 holes in a row.

"I talked to him later and Watts admitted he didn't remember a thing that had happened in those 15 holes.

" 'I never thought of anything,' he said. 'I just kept swinging the club head. I was in a sort of mental groove.'

"There was certainly no conscious effort in anything Gunn did. He went sailing through until he met Bobby Jones in the final round where neither conscious nor subconscious effort was of any use.

"Direct thought or brain action has certainly wrecked many a round of golf," Kieran continued. "If a fellow could just step up to a ball and think about nothing at all as he swung the club head, scores would take a terrific dive.

"Here's another thought along these lines," Kieran reported. "I've known a lot of baseball and football players. Many of these—not all of them—I wouldn't call too smart. I wouldn't say their brains were too agile, although they had their share of good sense. I've seen these fellows make few mistakes. They were generally where they should have been. Some instinct seemed to guide them. I know it wasn't sharp thinking.

Trying to Think

"On the other hand, I've known extremely intelligent players (I mean intelligent off the field) who always seemed to be pulling some boner or doing something wrong.

The East's fastest AAA auto racers will compete for high honors two days, Aug. 27 and 28; a thrilling 100-mile stock car race will be staged Sept. 2; and the nation's leading IMCA auto drivers will flirt with death, Sept. 4 and 5. Three days of harness races, Aug. 29, 30 and 31, will complete the afternoon grandstand program. A mammoth cast of 300 stars of circus, stage and screen, headed by six of the world's greatest aerial acts, will present the colossal 1949 State Fair Revue and Fireworks Grandstand Show each night of the fair. The famed U. S. Army Ground Forces band of 110 pieces and Royal Canadian Air Force Band will head the dozen bands and orchestras engaged. The biggest educational program in history will be presented.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

If They're Wild, They Belong To Tik!

Saw Tik Anderson last week and was reminded of the first time I ever spoke to him. The missus had sent me out one Saturday afternoon to hunt for some blackberries.

I took a long hike and couldn't find any. Finally, I came to Tik's house along that low stretch east of the fork on River Road. "Hi there," I says, "any blackberries around here?"

Tik says, "There used to be—but I don't know much about things that grow wild." Later, I found how Tik supports his family by picking berries. Ever since, I've been like the rest of folks in town—respectful of his right not to tell where "his" berries grow.

From where I sit, respecting other folks' rights comes natural in our town ... in America for that matter! Whether it's a person's right to enjoy a temperate glass of beer or ale, or whether it's Tik Anderson's right to keep secret where his berries are, it's all a big part of a real democracy!

Salt [illegible] Boiling Water

Did you know that salt will raise the boiling point of water? The next time you are cooking in a double boiler, add some table salt to the water-container section of the boiler. This lessens the time necessary to cook the food in the inner container.

After watching an exciting baseball game, it's "the American way" to relax on reaching home. And ... as you talk over the highlights of the game, that close decision at home plate ... it's a pleasure to enjoy a cool, refreshing glass of Minnesota brewed beer.

For beer is the kind of beverage Americans like. It belongs ... to pleasant living, to good fellowship, to sensible moderation. And our right to enjoy it, this too, belongs ... to our own American heritage of personal freedom.

Some Oklahoma History

Earliest known inhabitant of America—the Folsom man—lived in the Oklahoma Panhandle between 10,000 and 12,000 years ago; the first mining expedition in Oklahoma was led by the Spanish explorer, Don Diego del Castillo, in 1650; the first book published in Oklahoma was a school primer in the Creek language, printed at Union Mission in 1835, notes the World Book Encyclopedia.

Driver's Habits

Some drivers wear out tires in 10,000 miles or less, others in 20,000 miles, some get 30,000 miles, and others greater average mileages. This is largely due to a driver's habits and operating conditions. "Jackrabbit" starts, sudden stops, excessive use of brakes, high speeds on curves and frequent stops and starts in traffic all tend to wear away tread rubber and rob the tire of miles of life!

Royal, Yet Democratic

The houses of parliament are best known as the spot where popular will broke the power of Britain's kings. Actually they occupy a royal residence that was on the site from before the Norman conquest to the time of Henry VIII. Although parliament moved in after the Tudor kings, the building still has royal privileges exempting it from certain civic regulations.

Come and Get It

Six miles from Boise, Ida., off U. S. highway 30 on the Boise river was a little dell that rapscallions favored in the 60's as a holdup spot. An eastbound stagecoach from Boise was stopped by a lone highwayman here, and, as the bandit struggled to make off with the heavy strongbox and its $50,000 in gold, a sharp-eyed passenger nailed him with a pistol shot. The wounded bandit hit for the brush, lugging the loot, and disappeared. The next day, however, he was found dead by a posse—but he had buried the gold somewhere nearby. It has never been found to this day.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Deep Freeze Gifts 'Chill' Demos; Senate Kills Welfare Setup Plan; Taft Is Target of AFL Vote Drive

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DEEP FREEZE:

Capitol 'Chilled'

To paraphrase an old tune, it was "January in June" in Washington as the story of the gifts of the home freezer units unfolded and expanded. Finally, the sordid angles of the "5 per centers" operations reached to the White House.

WITNESSES before a group probing the extent and results of "influence" obtainable by the "5 per centers" testified that of several deep freeze units given away by the manufacturers, one went to Mrs. Harry Truman, wife of the President of the United States. Others who apparently received a similar gift were Chief Justice Vinson of the U.S. supreme court, James K. Vardaman, Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, Mr. Truman's military aide. In fact, General Vaughan got two, so the witness said.

In connection with that development, there was a question which it seemed should have been answered long ago by the man most concerned. The man was President Truman. The question was: Why hasn't the President declared that White House influence and prestige are not for sale, cannot be wheedled by favorite hangers-on, and cannot be swayed by anything except the best interests of the people of the United States?

ANY FAIR-MINDED citizen will concede that there is no reason to think the acceptance of the gifts mentioned involved any law violation. Even though the company which paid the bills for the home freezers is linked with the ubiquitous John Maragon and the inquiry into the activities of "5 per centers" the mere fact of receiving personal gifts does not constitute legal offense.

In any sense of the word, it seems to be an offense against propriety. It is further evidence of a downward trend in political morals, a not too new development in these changing times. On the evidence at hand thus far, the deep freeze affair is not important—it is merely symptomatic.

ELECTIONS:

Taft Is Target

The American Federation of Labor, looking to the 1950 congressional elections, set plans for raising a million dollar war chest with which to knock off candidates obnoxious to the organization.

THE MILLION DOLLAR figure was the "minimum" officials said, with a voluntary contribution of $2 a head to be asked of the federation's members for work in the 1950 campaign.

It was no secret that Ohio's Senator Taft was the main target of AFL efforts, with the second target being Senator Donnell (R., Mo.) who was described by AFL's William Green as "more like Taft than anyone in the senate."

The per capita contribution, double that of the organization for the 1948 elections, will be split evenly with the state federations whose share is to be used in working at the precinct level.

AFL's election activity will have an important bearing on the future of the Republican party in the nation. For instance, if Taft should be knocked off in his race for re-election to the senate, it would mean that Dewey would remain as a top figure in the GOP hierarchy. On the other hand, if Taft should win and Dewey were defeated in a bid for his third term as New York's governor, the party would be all Taft's

SYRIA:

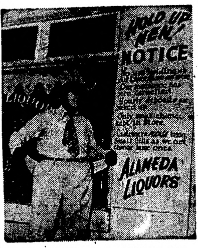
New Cabinet

The fighting, the blood-letting were over. Peace of a sort reigned in Syria after a lightning like army coup that overthrew and executed President Hossni Zayim. The army committee which took things into its own hands was replaced by a new coalition cabinet which was organized by Col. Sami Hennaui who headed the revolution.

IT APPEARED that civilian rule would predominate, inasmuch as the new cabinet was composed mostly of civilians. The new government represented three political parties and various independent groups that opposed both Zayim and the constitutional regime which fell last March.

The premier is Hashim El Atassy, head of the national bloc and a former president of Syria.

Slim Pickings



It will be slim pickings for holdup men who go after Frank B. Tippins' store in Miami. Twice within one month holdup men came and got a total of $513. Smartened up now, Tippins will no longer be a lure for robbers.

WELFARE:

No Cabinet Status

The senate was having none of President Truman's proposal for creation of a federal department of welfare with cabinet status. A coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats dealt the project a pulverizing blow by a vote of 60 to 32.

WITH a constitutional majority in either house able to veto any such plan, the senate action meant complete and final defeat of the plan to transform the federal security agency, which handles the nation's education, health, and social security functions, into a department of welfare.

This proposal stemmed from the recommendations of the Hoover commission which spent two years seeking ways and means to make government more efficient and economical.

OHIO'S Republican Senator Taft, denying the Republicans were repudiating Hoover in opposing a plan they believed ran counter to the Hoover commission recommendations, declared:

"I believe very strongly that Mr. Hoover was misled."

This led Senator Lucas, Illinois, Democratic floor leader, to state that he was both "shocked and surprised that the good Republican from Ohio would deal with Mr. Hoover in this manner."

'THOUGHT' LAW:

Held too Broad

The fallacy of attempting to deal with ideologies through laws has been highlighted by a Maryland circuit judge. The judge, Joseph Sherbow of Baltimore, ruled that the state cannot punish a person for what that person thinks.

The opinion was given in a case involving a state law against people who join or work with subversive organizations. It was the first courts test of the new law that required loyalty oaths by public employees and candidates for office.

"The supreme court," Judge Sherbow said in his opinion, "has made it clear that laws may punish acts and conduct which clearly, seriously and imminently threaten substantive evils.

"They (the laws) may not intrude into the realm of ideas, religious and political beliefs, and opinions. The law deals with overt acts, not thoughts. It may punish for acting, but not for thinking."

The law which Judge Sherbow tossed out did not specifically ban the Communist party. Its preamble said communism is a dangerous, world-wide conspiracy that fits the definition of subversive activity. Anything that aims at the overthrow of this government by force was deemed subversive.

Justice Sherbow said the law was too general. Declaring it violated the first, fifth and 14th amendments to the constitution, and Maryland's declaration of rights, he added:

"As stated by Justice Jackson (in a West Virginia case before the supreme court):

"If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion or other matters of opinion, or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein."

BARKLEY:

"Much Ado . . ."

Although he had declared it was "much ado about nothing," the nation wasn't dismissing Vice-President Barkley's seeming romance with a pretty 37-year old widow so lightly.

RECEIVING almost as much publicity as the Rita Hayworth—Aly Khan love story, Barkley's attentions to Mrs. Carlton S. Hadley, St. Louis, was second only to the "5 per center" probe as a topic of national speculation.

The "Veep"—as Barkley likes to be called—didn't seem too distressed by all the furore. He was smilingly posing with the widow for pictures; he had taken her to "meet the folks" in his home town of Paducah, Ky., and he had squired her to some baseball games and social affairs.

WOULD HE and the widow get married? Most folks seemed to think so. And, if that were current opinion, it was touched off by the "Veep" himself. Newspaper readers would remember that, crowning a beauty queen at Culpepper, Virginia, Barkley had declared that one day he would crown a "queen" of his own. The fact that later, at Paducah, he referred to his granddaughter as being the "queen" to whom he referred, few people believed him.

MacARTHUR:

Problem for Truman

No matter how the Truman administration plays it, Gen. Douglas MacArthur is a tremendous public relations problem.

THE GENERAL has twice declined the invitation to appear before senate committees, the second refusal being in connection with a bid to come home and tell a probe group what he thinks about the Chinese situation. The general replied that he thought he could do better staying in Japan.

Of course, President Truman could order the general home, but if he did so, and MacArthur accepted the order, both the White House and the state department would be in a constant case of jitters over what the 69-year-old prima donna might say in speeches throughout the country.

If the President chooses not to order the general home, then his critics will have fuel for added clamor that MacArthur is being isolated and persecuted.

APPARENTLY, no one seems to know the procedure in the event MacArthur refused to come home if ordered. There seems to be a prevalent conviction that MacArthur can stay in Japan forever, if he so chooses.

There are those who say for the general to make that decision would be a typical MacArthur gesture and that it would fit in superbly with his fine sense of the dramatic.

STALIN:

Very "Courteous"

The delayed report on how U. S. Ambassador Alan Kirk made out with Russia's Joe Stalin in a talk in Moscow held nothing more important than Kirk's report that the Soviet ruler was very "courteous and pleasant." However, anyone who might have expected anything else was indulging in wishful thinking.

SOME EXCITEMENT was stimulated by Kirk's refusal to comment immediately upon his interview with Stalin. He told reporters following the conference that he'd have something to say later.

The ambassador, a retired admiral and former envoy to Belgium, held the first meeting with Stalin that any American official has had in nearly a year. He described his visit to Stalin as a "courtesy call."

In for Year

Seeking to win a bet of $1,000 against $25,000, Don Haynes, Ashland, Ore., is to spend a year in this deluxe car. He made the bet with rancher D. M. Mauldin, a neighbor. The year will be up next February. Haynes holds a girl's picture he found in the road and she was to be given a new car if she identifies herself.

SAILORS:

Pockets, Mac!

The navy has relented at last. Harkening to a complaint stemming from 1797, the seagoing branch of Uncle Sam's forces has promised sailors they'll have pockets in their pants—but not until June, 1952. But, having waited this long, sailors could wait two more years. And that wasn't all. Promised, too, was elimination of the 13-button front on sailors' trousers, to be replaced with a zipper.

TOO MUCH WHEAT?

Problem of Farm Price Support Mounting

It might be an unpleasant task, but an inescapable one—the demand for wheat was falling off. That was the conclusion of the National Industrial Conference Board.

This organization reported that total domestic consumption for the year beginning July was expected to be lower than at any time since 1941.

At the same time, wheat stocks in all storage positions on April 1 were greater than in any other April with the exception of 1942 and 1943. In addition, the 1948-49 wheat harvest may be the third largest in history. With the U. S. already holding more than a quarter of last year's wheat crop, farm price support was becoming a major national problem.

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave and Granny, get settled in their new home in the homesteading area of southern Arkansas, and meet trouble immediately. Sig Flanagan, Sam Bragg and Sheriff Martin, representing the law, resent the fact that Andy's home used to be their old camping place. Flanagan shoots at Andy's home on pretense of shooting a deer. Andy, accompanied by Eliot, goes to town and confronts his enemies, but gets nowhere. Later, while Andy and Dave were working in the field, the Websters come over for a visit, bringing their 16-year-old daughter, Oreen, who immediately takes a fancy to young Dave.

CHAPTER X

"Bigelow Halleck's his name. But don't let it be said that I've warned you 'gainst him, for his mother and I are awful good friends. Big—we all call him Big for short—was a good boy till he got interested in a girl in Newcastle. That was when he was the basketball star there, an' this girl—she's Virgie Winslow, the mayor's daughter—turned his head with her notice, an' he fell mightily in love with her. He thought she was the most wonderful thing in the world, an' she was the mayor's daughter too, you see. So when he found out that she wasn't playin' fair with him, it broke him all up inside an' he took the notion that all girls are like her. She learned him a lot. Well, when the basketball season was over an' Big wasn't starrin' in anything, she dropped him like a hot brick. She started goin' with a town boy an' when Big finally found out it hit him hard an' he's acted different towards girls ever since then. Don't have no faith in 'em it would seem."

When the Websters left, Dave made a point of being very busy elsewhere, and it wasn't until he heard the pickup roar away that he returned to the house, more or less furtively.

The sun was almost down when Bugler's roaring announced someone's approach. Andy left the chair at the right of the fireplace, where he had been resting, and went to the door.

It was Mr. Eliot. He was walking fast. His right arm swung in time with his quick, short steps, but his left arm hung still, as if it wished no part in either the man's haste or the tempo of his walking.

"What's your hurry?" Andy called. "Come in."

"Hello," Mr. Eliot said crisply. He ws undeniably excited. It was in his eyes, which were bright and quick behind the heavy-rimmed glasses; it was on his round face, and in the stern set of his usually gentle mouth. "Perhaps we'd better talk out here," he said, casting a furtive look toward the woods to the south.

"What's up?" Andy asked, going out to meet him. "Anything happened to Mr. Flipp?"

"No." Mr. Eliot puffed a few times, recovering from his fast walk. "We are of the opinion that something is about to happen to you."

"That so?" Andy looked at him wonderingly. "What are you talking about, Mr. Eliot?"

Any Tactics However Spurious

"Mr. Flipp returned to our cabin a few minutes ago, from setting some traps, and found me deeply engrossed with an intricate chess problem. I've often attempted to interest Mr. Flipp in chess, but he refuses to see the beauty and depth of its infinite combinations; he prefers checkers, I regret to add. However, that is neither here nor there. He came in from setting his traps and asked me to come and tell you not to go near the southwest corner of your place tonight."

Andy blinked. "Why? I wouldn't have any business down there tonight—but why?"

Dave came out then, curious as to the purpose of Mr. Eliot's visit.

"The reason for his warning is this," Mr. Eliot said. "Someone has killed a young doe and planted it on your property."

Andy started in surprise. "Why, the dirty, sneaking—"

"Mr. Flipp caught a fleeting glimpse of a rider leaving that part of your quarter section. He was unable to recognize the man, but he did note that it was not a black horse."

"So, they'd try to frame me for killing a doe!" Andy mused. "Why, I've been busy here all day; I haven't shot a gun since coming out here; I don't have a hunting license. Of all the—"

"Mr. Flipp reasons—and I think his mental processes are sound in this instance—that the warden will come here before long and inform you of what he has discovered, to wit, the dead doe. It may be troublesome."

"They'd have to prove something, though," Andy pointed out.

"The warden would say that none of the hunters could have killed the doe there, for they have been much farther to the southwest all day. He would say that you shot the deer and left it there until after dark before bringing it to the house in stealth. He would say—"

"Maybe he would say all these things," Andy broke in, "but that's not proof. Why, what chance would I have had to kill the doe? Another thing, why would the doe have been down there, open to a shot, when the hunters were so far away?"

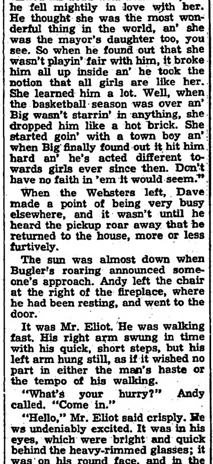
"Oh, when the hounds are running, the deer are excited, and they appear almost anywhere. Mr. Flipp is in concealment not far from the doe, watching to see the warden make the 'discovery.'"

"Let's go down there," Dave put in quickly, "and drag the doe off our land. We could throw it into the bayou and—"

Mr. Eliot raised a hand for silence. "No. Positively not that! It may be that someone is down there on watch, and if you go near the deer your case will become even more dangerous and complicated. If you touch the deer, then your accusers will be in a position to substantiate the accusation that you shot it and then waited for dusk or darkness before bringing it to the house. Don't go near it."

Andy shook his head slowly. "I didn't think they were that low-down! I didn't think—"

"Of course not," Mr. Eliot agreed gently. "Nor did I. We are idealists, Mr. Ives. It is an unfortunate mental state, viewed immediately, but ultimately it makes for a better world. Do you play chess?"



Hope was taking up hot biscuits as Big Halleck entered the kitchen.

"I've played a few games. What did Mr. Flipp think I'd better do about this?"

"He sent no instructions by me, save that you must not go near the doe. He wanted you to be aware of the chicanery that is shaping up against you. I am pleased to point out, though, that in such matters Mr. Flipp is very resourceful, and it is entirely possible that he will arrange some means of protecting you."

"I don't want him getting into trouble, though, to save me," Andy said worriedly. "If he tries to drag the doe away, they may catch him."

Kate came to the door then and called supper. "You come in too, Mr. Eliot," she invited. "I've set a place for you."

"It would be delightful," Mr. Eliot assured her, "but I must return to—"

"Say," Dave cut in, "there comes somebody now. Mr. Flipp, isn't it?"

They looked and saw the tall, narrow figure of Absalom Flipp taking shape out of the darkness of the woods. He was walking faster than usual. Jessie Bell ambled along behind him. Bugler bellowed at the shadowy figure, then caught sight of his mother and ran to meet her.

"Evenin', all," Mr. Flipp greeted them placidly. "Yes'm, Miz Ives, we'll take supper with you, an' thanks."

"Good!" Kate said. "I'll set another place."

The Ives Meet A New Neighbor

"Thanks for warning me," Andy said. "Did you see anybody down there?"

Mr. Flipp nodded. "The game warden'll be here in a minute or two. He rode past where the doe was dropped from the horse—same color horse he's ridin' too — but he didn't look in the sassafras clump to see if the doe was still there. When he headed his horse this way, I tore out, takin' a short cut to beat him here. He's sort of pokin' along, waitin' fer good dark 'fore springin' his trap on you."

"Supper's ready," Hope called. "Everybody come in."

Mr. Flipp shoved his foot back into the boot. "Them words make a pretty soup," he said. "I'm hongry. Say, whur's the wash pan? I oughta wash up a little 'fore I eat; I skunt a skunk right after dinner today."

"I should bathe my hands too," said Mr. Eliot. "I dressed four buffalo and a hundred-pound gar this afternoon."

"He weighed a hundred pounds?" Dave asked, marveling. "Say, how big do they get?"

"Much bigger than that. Three or four hundred pounds, possibly."

"They git so big," Mr. Flipp said, "that you cain't hardly lie 'bout 'em."

When the guests had washed up, Kate seated them, with Andy, Dave, and Granny, at the little table. She and Hope would serve. "It's nice to have you both with us," she said. "Don't mind Andy's quiet, solemn way tonight; he's worn out. Do you take coffee? We have no cream."

Mr. Flipp glanced sideways at Andy. "I bet he's tired, all right. Yes'm, I like it black an' stout enough to float a wedge. This here supper looks good. I ain't et woman-cooked vittles in a spell."

"You should be ashamed of not being married," Granny said severely. "Every man ought to marry and have a family if he can."

"Got a onion?" Mr. Flipp asked Kate. "Ain't nothin' better'n onion with fried ham."

"I'll get one," Hope said, opening the kitchen cabinet and fishing a large yellow Bermuda from a sack. "Sliced or quartered?"

"Slice it. Better if you'd soak it in salt water fer a spell." And, to Granny: "Onions is another reason why I ain't never married. Lot o' women turn up they noses at onions. Danged if any woman's goin' to tell me what to eat, an' when!"

"I think," Granny said, "that you have been wise and considerate in remaining single."

"Pass the biscuits, Dave," said Mr. Flipp, ignoring her double-edged tribute.

At this point, Jessie Bell and Bugler set up a bedlam of warning outside. Mr. Flipp looked at Andy, nodded almost imperceptibly. Mr. Eliot raised his brows and took more rice. Dave shifted uneasily. Andy left his chair and went to the door.

But the caller was not the warden, who was certainly doing a fine job of loitering on his way to the house of Andy Ives! It was a young man whom Andy hadn't seen before. He was getting down from his horse as Andy stepped out the door, and in the dim lamplight that came through the door, he looked handsome and well set up.

"You're Mr. Ives?" he asked pleasantly, coming toward Andy. "My name's Halleck, Bigelow Halleck. They call me Big."

"I'm Andy Ives. Glad to meet you, Mr.—"

"No 'Mr.,'" the visitor cut in. "Make it just Big, without the handle."

"Come in and have supper with us, Big," Andy invited.

"I'll warm a little; cold riding. I've had supper. Thanks. In case you wonder what I'm doing here this time of night, Mr. Buckley said you're looking for a good cow to milk."

"Sure, come right in. We'll talk about it. Better have a cup of coffee."

"All right, I will. It'd warm me up." He stooped as he went through the door.

Hope Is Stunned At Seeing Big

Hope was taking up hot biscuits as Big Halleck entered the kitchen. She straightened up, her face flushed from oven heat, and almost dropped the pan. Then she realized that she was staring at him, and turned quickly to the table, where Granny was holding the plate for her. He was so big! His eyes were the clearest, deepest blue she had ever seen, and there was about him, all of him, a look of warm strength. His thick yellow hair gleamed in the lamplight, and when he grinned, a little embarrassed by facing so many strangers all at once, she saw that his teeth were white and strong and regular. And when he looked at her as Andy said, "My daughter, Hope," she scarcely heard her father's words, for Big Halleck's eyes were level and steady and intense, and there was something deep-laid in them that made her feel a strange weakness.

"Came to see me about a cow," Andy explained. "Pour him a cup of coffee, Kate. Here, Big, sit in my chair; I'll bring in another."

Then Hope remembered. Mrs. Webster had told them about Big Halleck, of how he had been embittered by the mayor's fickle daughter!

"Glad to meet you all," said the young man. "Hi, Mr. Eliot, Mr. Flipp."

Granny shot a look at Hope, for she too was remembering Birdie Webster's account.

"Hi, Big," said Mr. Flipp. "Glad you come. These folks need a cow. Pass the biscuits, Dave."

Again, the hounds were roaring and barking. Andy knew it must be the warden now. He hurried to the door.

"Get down and come in," he called. "Just in time for supper."

"Thanks," the rider said, remaining on his horse. "I'm on business. You Andy Ives?"

"That's right," Andy said.

"I'm Sam Bragg, game warden of this district."

"Shet up, Jessie Bell!" roared Flipp from the door. "Who is it, Andy?" he asked innocently.

My school-age children enjoy scrubbing their faces now. I tacked a large mirror below our own at the proper height for them.

Did you know that table napkins may be folded in triangular fashion for an informally served breakfast, lunch, supper or tea.

To reduce fire hazard, when removing spots with cleaning fluid, always use a cotton cloth for the daubing and work out-of-doors or near an open window.

When milk needs to be scalded for a cream sauce or a custard or pudding dessert, heat it carefully; if placed over too high heat it scorches easily.

In making tucks, pleats or darts, it's a good idea to reinforce them, by turning the fabric around and stitching back half an inch.

Mace, as well as nutmeg, is delicious sprinkled on baked custard before baking. Try it on bread pudding and on sugar cookies, too.

Buy a 10-cent scrapbook, then when sewing save a large piece of any material you think you may need for patches later, put paste on one edge and paste it in the book. Devote separate pages to "Mary's clothes" or "Bob's clothes" or other members of the family. It's much simpler than hunting through a bag of scraps.

The first oil well was drilled in 1859, ninety years ago. Drilling is still going on even under the ocean. Occasionally one of those wells bursts into flame and "up in smoke" go much of the profits. Much the same thing happens when many of my nephews and nieces allow their money to burn holes in their pockets. Your government offers a safe, sure way of holding on to some of that pay check. That is through the Payroll Savings Plan for the purchase of U. S. Savings Bonds.

Otter Tales

METER DEPARTMENT

Boy, have I been having dizzy spells lately! First I thought it was the heat. Then I thought it was the lightning that's been chasing me all summer. I knew it wasn't anything I ate, because North Dakota lignite has been the bulk of my diet for years and it's doggone good stuff.

Well, one day I happened to mention my trouble to Harold Neuman who is superintendent of the Otter Tail Power Company meter department. "Shucks," said Harold, "there's nothing wrong with you. You've just got a touch of meter-itis. That comes from working so hard and spinning around through so many meters."

"Is that so?" I said. "Come to think of it, I do get whirled around quite a bit, but I never thought much of it before because I get knocked around all the time anyway." "You never thought much of it?" asked Harold, indignantly "Well, your education has certainly been sadly neglected!"

So Harold pointed out that there are more than 103,000 meters installed with Otter Tail customers throughout the system. In 1948 this precision equipment "metered" more than 303 million kilowatt hours of electricity. No wonder I get dizzy! (It's even worse this year. On Thursday, July 28, the Otter Tail Power Company completed generation of its 400 millionth kilowatt hour during the past 12 month period!)

What amazed me most about the Meter Department is the amount of work required to keep an accurate measurement of the electricity you folks use. The department employs 14 people. Five of these folks do nothing but house to house testing of Otter Tail meters. Two men are occupied full time in testing and checking the meters on large industrial accounts.

TESTING METERS IN THE FIELD

One man devotes his time to repairing time switches, and the rest of the staff work in the shop at the Hoot Lake Plant. Last year—1948—these folk tested and serviced 15,249 meters. In addition to the meters already in service that have to be checked, every new meter put into service is thoroughly checked before it is installed.

"Look at the layout we've got," said Harold, pointing with pride to the equipment in the Meter Department. "Lots of folks don't realize that it takes thousands of dollars worth of specialized, precision equipment just to make sure that the electricity they use is measured accurately."

Well, folks, I'm awfully glad I found out what makes me dizzy. At first I thought maybe I was suffering from hardening of the neon veins. But now I find out I've only got a slight touch of an "occupational" ailment—which is necessary to make sure you get all the electricity you pay for.

The two mountains are situated in New Zealand's volcano belt on North island, where one of the world's most spectacular eruptions occurred in 1886. Tarawera exploded with such force it caused a lake to sink and radically changed the geography of the entire area. Ngauruhoe erupted April 30, 1948, for the first time in 20 years.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

Dangerous Malady

What the Russians stand for has lately come under heavy attack from almost every group and individual in America. We are almost unanimous. Current Congressional investigations at last seem to be hitting pay dirt. Russia herself, by strangling little Czechoslovakia and conducting the "cold war," has been losing some of her friends. Influential Communists are deserting, once they see what Russia's "ideologies" really are like.

In Our Generation

No matter by what name you call it, state control has grown in almost every country you can name. This has happened in our generation. After World War I, politicians in many nations sensed their opportunities for power. Usually, this power was obtained through economic tyranny. Heavy taxes, false money, and tinkering with production and distribution kept the tyranny in power. Finally, it was Germany, Italy, and Japan that brought on another terrible war.

They were the "statist" nations. In each of these nations aggression against other countries followed aggression against the individual at home. Little nations, weakened by statism of their own, were easy victims. When their people did not care to resist and nothing seemed worthwhile, totalitarianism could find easy pickings. Now, statist Russia continues this sorry business.

Recognize the Infection

The infection of statism is at its worst in Russia, but we have not escaped it in America. We cannot always call it Communism, for unfortunately it does not always wear the name. Yet its effects are unmistakable. It demoralizes everything. Those in government can then justify a growing hunger for more and more power. Statesmen lose their vision to become mere politicians. They come to believe that the state can do everything.

The citizen is demoralized by statism. He gets to the point where he does not resist inroads on his liberties. He becomes a slave of the state. He is willing to follow evil courses no matter whether his heart tells him they are wrong. Resistance is simply not worthwhile. This is an exact picture of the German people before and during World Wars I and II. It fits also the Italians and the Japanese in World War II.

America's Danger

The picture fits Russia, too. It is the statist, government-controlled countries that soon take their people down the road to war. Nations do not foment wars when the people have a say-so. The greatest danger in America today is that we shall adopt one by one the ways of statism, even while denouncing Communism. This is what Russia would like to see us do. Instead, we must learn to identify the infection, no matter what label it may carry.

One label we are learning to avoid is Communism, but our understanding of it is usually pretty sketchy. Read and study "Communism in Action," a 140-page booklet, prepared by the Library of Congress. Copies may be obtained free from: American Wage Earners Foundation, 30 N. La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. This is a factual study that will show the results of statism in Russia. It will convince you that neither you nor America could be better off under government managed economy.

As an operator, Mr. Gatzke likes the way LAND O'LAKES field men "work with me constantly on a quality program, helping me to run a more efficient plant." And that, in turn, gives him more time for helping the farmer-owners . . . giving each of them the same square deal. Why don't you market your products through LAND O'LAKES? Airplane Hunting Regulations

A state law prohibits hunting from an airplane and also spotting or driving of wild game or fowl by use of an airplane.

Provisions in this law make it possible for the Conservation Department to issue permits to pilots and hunters for the taking of fox and wolves by airplane.

The regulations in connection with these permits are quite stringent. The pilot and hunter must notify the game warden prior to and after each such trip. The hunting may be done only over land with the consent of the owner and a written permit by him.

No airplane shall be so operated over any state or federal game refuge unless a special permit from the proper refuge manager is given first.

If these regulations are being violated by hunters in your area notify your local game warden or officer in conservation work.

If airplanes are flying low over your land without permission take the identification number on the airplane and report to this department.

Both the Department of Aeronautics and the Department of Conservation will take active steps to apprehend any illegal and unauthorized hunting by airplane.

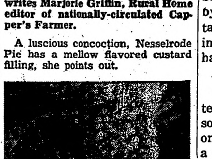
Let's Have Another Piece of Pie!

"Let's have another piece of pie" is a family theme song, when it's Nesselrode Pie on the dessert menu, writes Marjorie Griffin, Rural Home editor of nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer.

A luscious concoction, Nesselrode Pie has a mellow flavored custard filling, she points out.



NESSELRODE PIE

- 1 tbsp. unflavored gelatin
- 2 tbsp. cold water
- ½ c. milk
- ½ c. light corn sirup
- ¼ tsp. nutmeg
- ¼ tsp. salt
- 3 egg yolks, beaten
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- 3 egg whites
- 3 tbsp. light corn sirup
- 1 9-inch baked pie shell
- ¾ c. whipping cream
- 1 tbsp. light corn sirup

Soften gelatin in water. Combine milk, ½ cup sirup, nutmeg, salt, and egg yolks in top of double boiler; cook over boiling water until thickened, stirring occasionally. Remove from heat and add vanilla and softened gelatin; stir until gelatin is dissolved. Chill until starting to become rather firm; beat with rotary beater and fold in egg whites beaten very stiff with the 3 tablespoons sirup. Turn into pie shell and chill until firm. Whip cream with remaining sirup; spread over pie. Sprinkle with grated chocolate.

Legal Hunting Clothing is Red

Minnesota's deer season does not open for quite some time -- October 16 for bow and arrow and Nov. 12 for firearms -- but it is not too early to check your wardrobe and make sure you have what constitutes legal hunting clothing.

Checkered coats and caps for deer hunting are illegal from now on --- regardless of the color of the checks. A new law, passed by the legislature in 1945 which becomes effective Oct. 1, 1949, stipulates the hunters are required to have the visible portion of the hunting cap or jacket including the sleeves, scarlet or bright red or covered therewith, and the hunting coat scarlet or bright red, or made of a material the area of which is at least three quarters solid scarlet or bright red.

In other words, the old type plaid hunting coats and caps that are a check with red and black will not conform to this requirement and would have to be covered with scarlet or bright red material.

This law covers not only deer hunters, but also trappers and bear hunters operating on or after November 12 of this year in territory open to the taking of deer by local firearms.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

DOAN'S PILLS

No Land is Free

By W. T. PERSON

The Ives family, Andy, Kate, Hope, Dave, and Granny, moved to a piece of free land given by the state of Arkansas in return for cultivation. They meet trouble almost immediately in the persons of Sig Flanagan, Sam Bragg and Sheriff Martin, lawmen who resent their hunting lodge being taken from them for Andy's home. One evening, Emerson Eliot, a new neighbor, tells Andy that the hunters have shot a doe and planted it on Andy's land. Since doe shooting is illegal and Andy has no hunting license for any kind of game shooting, he can be jailed when the doe is found. Big Halleck, still another neighbor, steps by to offer the use of a cow for the family milk.

CHAPTER XI

"It's the game warden," Andy said. "Get down, Mr. Bragg. We can talk by the fire, where it's warm." He mustn't let Bragg know that he knew anything was up!

"Hi, Sam," Mr. Flipp greeted the officer. "How's tricks?"

"O.K., Flipp," the warden replied briefly. "Mr. Ives, we can't sit by the fire and talk the kind of business I came to talk with you. Get your hat and coat. I've got something to show you."

"That so?" Andy inquired. "Where is it? What are you talking about?"

"Somebody shot a doe this afternoon, late. It's hid on your land. I come to find out about it. You got a hunting license?"

"No. Why, man, I've never shot a deer in my life."

"Get your hat and coat," the warden repeated. "We'll have to look into this thing. Shooting a doe is serious. It's worse without a li—"

"Where's the doe?" Mr. Flipp asked.

"I'm dealing with Ives," said the warden. "You keep out of this."

"Fer a man yore age," said Absalom Flipp, "you ain't learned a lot of perliteness."

"What is it, Andy?" Kate called from the door. "Who shot a deer?"

"That seems to be the question," Andy said. He turned back to the house.

"Is he here to arrest someone?" Kate asked excitedly.

"No, ma'am, not yet," the warden answered. "Hurry up, Ives."

Mr. Eliot drained his coffee cup and pushed back his chair. "A delightful supper, Mrs. Ives. Indeed, a—"

"What's wrong?" Kate broke in. "What is it, Mr. Eliot? There's something Andy hasn't told me."

"There's no time to discuss it now," he told her. "You'll have the full story later this evening. We must go now."

"Can I help?" asked Big Halleck. "What's going on here?"

"Come on," Dave said. "I'll give you the score as we go through the woods."

The men went from the house together. Andy carried a lighted lantern.

"I won't need any of you but Ives," the warden said sharply. "The rest of you stay here."

"Now, Sam," Mr. Flipp drawled, "ain't you gittin' a little out o' hand? What law says ye can't walk these woods at night?"

The warden sputtered angrily, but realized that he had wandered out of the bounds of his authority. "All right, come on, then," he growled. "I'll make you wish you hadn't been born a smart aleck someday, though, Ab Flipp!"

"Now, now," Mr. Eliot said, clucking softly, "all of this has no bearing on the question of the moment."

"Get ahead of me with the light," ordered the officer, "and go southwest. Flipp, you know where that sassafras thicket is, down near the corner of this quarter section. Lead the way."

"Sure," said Absalom. "Glad to help out any way I can."

When they were near the thicket, the warden pushed ahead.

"Bring the lantern," he ordered. "The doe is hid here." He swung off his horse, handed the reins to Dave. "Hold him, boy."

Andy gave him the lantern and followed. His heart was racing, more with rage than with fear. He had never been framed in any way; it was a low moment.

The warden stopped abruptly and muttered a curse. He wheeled on Andy. "So, you've sneaked it away from here, have you? Where is that doe?"

Deefy Saves the Day for Andy

"I don't know anything about the doe," Andy said, fighting for calm. "You're the one that seems to know a lot about it. Where was the doe?"

"Right here." The warden pointed. "Look, there's blood. There's where the deer was lying; you see the grass mashed down. Where—Ab Flipp, did you take that deer out of this thicket?"

"Nup. Now, Sam, you know I wouldn't steel nobody's deer, don't you? Would you like to search my cabin?"

"Or mine?" Andy invited. "I'll let you look all you please."

The warden looked from one to the other. He was white; his mouth worked slowly, but no words came. "I'll get at the bottom of this!" he said in a voice that shook with mingled emotions.

"I hope you do," Andy told him. "And let me know what you find out, won't you? I'd be interested."

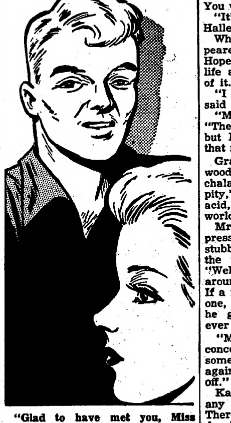
Mumbling, the officer snatched the reins from Dave's grasp and climbed onto his horse. Then he rode into the darkness.

"Phew!" Andy whistled softly. "Mr. Flipp, what became of that doe?"

Absalom Flipp laughed softly. "Well, sir, it's a funny thing! While I was hid out there, at dusk, watchin' this thicket, Deefy come out of the swamp. He moved as quiet as a black ha'nt. His head was high, an' it looked like he was sniffin' the air. He come right straight to this thicket an' got that doe. He dis'appeared, runnin' light an' soft, carryin' that deer as easy as he'd 'a' carried a rabbit! That's what went with the doe!"

"Why in thunder didn't you tell me before now? I've been worrying and wondering what to do, ever since Mr. Eliot came and told me the doe was here."

"It don't hurt a man to worry," said Mr. Flipp. "It's when he can't worry that things are gittin' bad."



"Glad to have met you, Miss Hope," he said. "And you, Mrs. Ives, and you—"

They returned to the cabin, little talk among them. "If you had known the deer was gone from the thicket and that you were safe," Mr. Eliot said to Andy, "then you might have been overconfident, or you might have said something out of key. Mr. Flipp is psychologist enough to be aware of such possibilities."

Andy nodded. "Oh, I don't hold it against him, of course. I just wondered why he let me worry like that."

Granny and Flipp Exchange Words

"I used the term 'psychologist'," Mr. Eliot said apologetically. "It is rather pretentious in connection with Mr. Flipp, but after all he does have a certain native intelligence, and he is very shrewd in a great many ways."

"I like him," Andy said simply.

When they were at the house, Dave spread the word of what had happened, and Granny looked triumphant.

"I told you that poor, deaf Negro wasn't a creature to be feared. See? He's helping us so soon!"

"Keep this thing quiet," Mr. Flipp counseled. "If word of what happened gets back to the warden an' that gang, it may go hard with Deefy. They'd hate him somep'n awful if they knowed he busted into their little game."

"We'll not talk it," Andy promised. He looked at Bigelow Halleck. "You came out to talk to me about a cow. Would you like to go into the kitchen, where we can deal in private?"

"No sir. It's all right in here. I didn't come to 'deal,' exactly. Just heard you wanted a good cow to milk, and I've got one that ought to be about right for you."

"How much do you want for her?"

"I didn't come to sell you a cow. I—"

"Surely, you didn't come to give us a cow!" Andy broke in.

"I came to offer you a cow. I've a nice Jersey, just fresh, that we don't need, and you're welcome to keep her and milk her."

"Well, that's mighty nice of you, Big," Andy drawled. "I'd take good care of her, and feed her as well as I could. I don't have any hay, though, or corn, except what little I've bought for my mules to work on, and—"

"I wouldn't bother about how you fed her," Bigelow broke in. "I'd be sure she'd get a good care. You're welcome to her, Mr. Ives."

Mr. Flipp cast a sharp eye at Granny. "I reckin you'd take care of the milkin', wouldn't you?"

Granny's eyes snapped. "I could do it, all right. If you'll hold the calf for me, we'll let you have a little buttermilk now and then."

"Obliged. It gives me gas on my stummick."

"I'll bring her over in the morning," Bigelow Halleck promised, preparing to leave. "Nice meetin' you all."

"Same to you," Andy said. "It's a mighty nice feeling we have out here, that our neighbors are interested and kind. We'll try to pay some of this back sometime. Dave can get the cow. No use in putting you to the trouble of bringing her over."

"Oh, I don't mind. I'm not rushed these days, anyway. Little clearing to get done before spring, and that's all."

Hope was watching him talk. There was a quiet confidence about him.

Suddenly he looked straight at her, so quickly and without warning that Hope's lips parted in surprise. "Glad to have met you, Miss Hope," he said. "And you, Mrs. Ives, and you—"

"Mrs. Craig," Granny helped him when he hesitated. "Most people who know me well call me Granny. You will, later, I'm sure."

"It'd be a pleasure," Bigelow Halleck said gravely.

When he had gone, the room appeared considerably bigger and, to Hope, rather empty. A great deal of life and warmth seemed to go out of it.

"I like that young man," Granny said firmly.

"Most folks do," Mr. Flipp said. "They's been some talk about him, but I figger it's woman-made, an' that makes it wuthless."
